"You need not stare so," I continued. "I am telling you the truth. I dressed the poor creature's wounds that night, and the next day she sent for me and told me a secret. She had been left an orphan when quite young, and Blair's mother, who was very wealthy, had taken her into her family as a sort of confidential servant, keeping her mostly in her own apartments. In this way she had seen more of Blair than she would have done under ordinary circumstances. He was a handsome, dashing young fellow, and, almost unconsciously to herself and entirely so to him, she became deeply attached to him. Not long before the war broke out he married and brought his wife home to live. This opened poor Margaret's eyes to the sad truth that her peace of mind was gone forever, and she could not endure the misery to which she knew she must be subjected if she remained in the family. You know that Blair was one of the first to offer his services and raise a regiment when the war came. Margaret heard of it and, by what means she did not tell me, managed to disguise herself and enlist in it. I can't imagine how she escaped detection, but she did, and all know with what bravery and coolness she fulfilled her duty. Her last words to Blair were: 'I was sure I should save your life in some way, and I die happy. Think sometimes of poor Margaret. Oh, my God, pardon'— 'And the next moment Margaret Powers, the brave color sergeant of the Seventh infantry, was dead."

My two auditors made no comment on my story. Hardy covered his face with his hands and turned away.

Suddenly Mason started and listened intently, then, without a word, sprang to the side of his horse, which was fastened near the tent, and began placing the saddle upon him with his own hands. We hastily followed his example and in a few minutes stood thoroughly equipped beside our horses, ready to mount. Then I asked:

"What is it?" Mason.

"The long roll," he replied.

"On the right; Devereaux's division, I think."

"Another stampede among Hazelby's mules probably," said I.

"No," said Mason. "Hazelby is on the left now, and, besides, the general heard it and started before I did. He is as ready for action as any one when there's fighting ahead. Have you any cartridges to fit my pistol, doctor?"

I gave them to him, and even before he had finished loading his revolver the general had mounted, and we were by his side hastening to the front. For a time all was quiet, but just before daybreak the enemy attacked and drove in our pickets, of whom two were killed and several wounded. A skirmish followed, and for the next few hours I was fully occupied with my professional duties. About noon they brought in a poor young fellow, a mere boy apparently, and one glance at the fearful gash in his head assured me that he had but a few moments to live. I would not annoy him by examining his wound, as I knew I could do nothing to prolong his life or alleviate his sufferings. At that moment Mason came in with a message from the general; and when his eye fell upon the poor fellow before me he whispered:

"Doctor, it's the corporal of the Tenth, the one Jay says is a woman."

Afterward I questioned some of the men in her company, but none of them had ever suspected that their former corporal was a woman.

So Mason was satisfied that a woman might have sufficient courage to face the enemy and strength and fortitude to endure a soldier's privations.

Didn't Cut the Ace.

The greatest delight of Pat Sheedy, according to a friend of the famous gambler, was to "double cross" the crooked card sharks.

"Sheedy once strolled into a tough gambling resort in the west where he was not known and stood watching the games," the friend relates. "One of the dealers was 'spieling' to several countrymen and had about convinced them to take a chance at his game.

"'I'll bet you 2 to 1 that I can shuffle the deck and cut the ace of hearts the first time,' he announced.

"'I'll take $50 of that if you'll let me shuffle the cards,' Pat said.

"The dealer agreed, and the money was staked. The countrymen also made small bets.

"'Are you satisfied?' the dealer asked when the cards were shuffled. 'The proposition is that I am to cut the ace of hearts the first cut.'

"Every one agreed. Then the dealer—he was a tough one—whipped out a big hunting knife and slashed the deck in two. But he didn't take the money. Sheedy had palmed the ace of hearts while shuffling the cards."

Animal Crackers

This is great fun for little folks and a good game for children's parties. You all know those little biscuit in the shape of animals, lions, sheep, dogs, and so on. Well, you put a plate full of these on the table, and then each child draws one out with eyes shut. When each one has a biscuit all take turns in giving an imitation of the animal their biscuit represents. The one who does this best is winner and should receive some little prize.

For Mother.

If you want to give mother a birthday present, one easily made and very useful, make her a linen shoe wrapper. It is made of a square of brown linen, about fifteen inches on a side, bound with silk braid. It can be embroidered with fantastic designs, such as "The Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe." On one corner sew two strings of the braid. A pair of mother's shoes can be wrapped in the square and tied around with the strings.

How Good News Spreads.

"I am 70 years old and travel most of the time," writes B. F. Tolson, of Elizabethtown, Ky. "Everywhere I go I recommend Electric Bitters, because I owe my excellent health and vitality to them. They effect a cure every time." They never fail to tone the stomach, regulate the kidneys and bowels, stimulate the liver, invigorate the nerves and purify the blood. They work wonders for weak, run-down men and women, restoring strength, vigor and health that's a daily joy. Try them. Only 50c. Satisfaction is positively guaranteed by Upchurch Drug Co.

FATHER 80-MOTHER 76

The aged father and mother of a prominent Boston lawyer safely carried through the last two winters by

Vinol

The son says: "My father and mother owe their present strength and good health to Vinol. During the last two trying winters neither of them had a cold, and were able to walk farther and do more than for years. I think Vinol is perfectly wonderful. It certainly is the greatest blood-making, strengthening tonic for old people I ever heard of."

We want every feeble old person in this town to try Vinol. We will return their money without question if it does not accomplish all we claim for it.

J. M. MORGAN.

We cannot undertake to publish visits of one neighbor to another, or that Mrs. Bifkins took dinner with Mrs. Simfkins. Visits of friends from a distance will be cheerfully published, but "Miss A was all smiles on Sunday because Mr. B came down the road," must of necessity find its way to the waste basket. There's a limit to all things, and items which cannot be understand by anyone but the writer thereof cannot be published. Sorry, but it's so!

It never occurs to a boy that he will some day know as little as his father.

"The amendment is dead but the spirit still lives," said Mr. O'Neal in a speech at Huntsville last Saturday, and he is eminently correct in the statement. The amendment is certainly dead, was crushed out of existence by an avalanche of votes on November 29, and it was devoutly hoped by the conservative voters of the State that its spirit would give up the ghost in a quiet and decent manner—that it would stay dead for all time, and not continually be bobbing up on all occasions.

As an evidence that the spirit still lives, the preposterous claims of the Mallory forces as to the number of counties that he is going to carry, reminds one of the absurd claims made by the amendists prior to the election, and there is not the remotest doubt but that at the primary on May 2 the claimants will find themselves in a similar predicament as the amendists did in November.

With all due respect to Mr. Mallory, for whom as a man and a gentleman we have the greatest regard, he unquestionably embodies the spirit of the defunct amendment in his candidacy, and the man who voted against the amendment will do well to vote against him in the coming primary.

The amendment is dead, but its authors still live, and should they be intrusted with the government of the State, there is no telling what substitute they may offer for it.

A vote for O'Neal means a safe and sane government that will not be controlled by the whims and crotchets of any self-constituted guardians of the people; a government that while upholding the honor and dignity of the State in every respect, will not attempt to limit in any way the liberty of the people.

J. M. MORGAN

In entering the race for Sheriff, Mr. J. M. Morgan brings an interesting figure. As a former Sheriff he made an excellent reputation for himself as a faithful and vigorous officer. His candidacy puts more life and vigor into the campaign and no doubt but that his many friends in the county will be pleased to learn that he is a candidate for his former position.

BANKHEAD SHOULD BE RETURNED.

This is the wrong time to make any change in our representatives in the United States Senate. Senator Bankhead has served the State well, and there is no need at this time to put anyone in his place. He has served as Senator for only three years but on account of his experience as Congressman, he has been given places on important committees, a very essential position to get anything accomplished for his constituency. He is now busy in effort to get some needed and very important measures enacted for the welfare of his State, and is in a position to accomplish great good for his State, a service that it would be impossible for a new man to perform. There is no reason to make this change now, and in our opinion it would be a backward move on the part of the State of Alabama, should she fail to return Senator Bankhead to the Senate.—Morgan County Times.

HOW'S THIS

How shall Capt. Frank S. White make his demand for rotation in office gibe with his earnest support of Senator Morgan for a sixth term? Is not this rotation in office plea suggested by the Captain's desire for office?—Mobile Register.

Senator Bankhead's best endorsements have come from his opponents. They have said that he devotes his time to getting things for Alabama. That means that he is helping to open our rivers, that he has secured public buildings, that he has secured tents for the veterans at Mobile, because the veterans want them, and because he is one of them. That he is working for government aid to public roads. His opponents admit all this, but virtually say that we should put a man there too great to work for material things. We want the very work Bankhead is doing, and we have no greater man in the State than the senior senator.—Birmingham Ledger.

ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

April 15th-17th, 1910, the Alabama Christian Endeavor Union will hold its twentieth annual convention in the First Presbyterian church at Anniston, Ala, and will be entertained by the Endeavorers of Anniston and Oxford.

Recently two new societies have been organized in Anniston and a city C. E. Union has begun its existance. The workers of these two cities are taking hold of the preparation of these coming meetings with enthusiasm and a great convention is assured.

Entertainment will be furnished free to all the delegates who attend this gathering.

Speakers of prominence are being secured.

Mr. Karl Lehmann of Boston, Mass., Interstate Field Secretary of Christian Endeavor is now touring the state, holding rallies and conferences and organizing new societies in the various towns visited. He will conclude his work at the convention in Anniston and leave immediately for Tennessee where he is to conduct a similar campaign.

Announcement Extraordinary!

GREAT CASH REALIZATION SALE!!!

Merchandise Doomed to the Slaughter!!

The citizens of Chilton county are to be treated to the greatest bargain event that ever took place in the history of her mercantile life.

On FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 25th, C. W. REYNOLDS will throw upon the market the largest aggregation of General and Staple Merchandise ever collected under one roof in this good county of Chilton.

Genuine bargains in all departments at astonishingly low prices.

On THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 24, our store will be closed during the entire day to enable our clerks to mark all goods in plain figures; no goods will be sold to any one on this day.

We have calculated the amount we are able to lose on this tremendous sale and have accordingly "cut out" the profits and much of the cost.

EVERY ARTICLE OF MERCHANDISE is to be slaughtered.

WE ARE DETERMINED NOT TO RESERVE

goods of any kind or character if price inducements will move them.

FOR FULL THIRTY DAYS AND THIRTY NIGHTS

beginning Friday, February 25th, and continuing through Friday, March 25th, this gigantic slaughtering carnival will run.

PROFITS ARE ACTUALLY EMASCULATED

and in many instances, too numerous to mention, COST is eliminated.

WHATEVER YOUR WANTS OR NECESSITIES

we can fill them, and at prices so surprisingly below what you have always paid for the same goods as to make you feel as if we had presented them to you.

SEE OUR BIG CIRCULAR

which gives you an idea of some of the bargains we are to offer you during this memorable sale. With such a large and diversified stock it would be impossible to enumerate even a small part of the bargains, but the CIRCULAR will enable you to form some kind of an estimate of the great PARLIAMENT of cut prices here inaugurated.

SAVE YOUR CASH FOR THIS SALE

do not be deceived into believing that you can get bargains "just as good or just as cheap" elsewhere for it cannot be done. OTHERS MAY strive to imitate, but not one can equal the sales put on under our personal supervision.

REMEMBER THE DATE AND REMEMBER THE PLACE

February 25th to March 25th, 1910

$3.50 Recipe Cures Weak Kidneys, Free

Relieves Urinary and Kidney Troubles, Backache, Straining, Swelling, Etc.

Stops Pain in the Bladder, Kidneys and Back.

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining, or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back of the head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids or ankles; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3 50 just for writing this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this:

Dr. A. E. Robinson, K 1141 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it, this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

A Case of Pique

By Lawrence Alfred Clay

(Copyright, 1909 by Associated Literary Press.)

There is a popular belief that a good-looking girl is a vain and conceited girl, and that she is always posing to be admired. This may be the case in one instance out of 50. The other 49 good-looking girls are not a bit vain nor conceited. They don't want to be admired, but are sometimes a bit piqued if not looked at as much as a homely girl.

This was the case with Miss Molly Cranshaw, who, on a certain summer date, was paying a visit to her mother's sister in the country. Some 19-year-old girls, with her hair, face and figure, would have posed before the mirror half the time, whereas she just went right along with supreme indifference. That is, she thought she did, and she was praised for it. She went to the country knowing that she would get freckles and sunburn, and that there were no manicurists or hairdressers, and some of her friends called her a little heroine.

But for the fact that farmer Johnson's hired man, on the next farm, fell off a load of hay and broke his leg, and that young Dr. Flint, from the village, came driving out posthaste in his gig, only a small part of the United States might have heard of Miss Molly.

To reach the Johnson house the doctor had to pass the Jessup house, and Mrs. Jessup had asked the girl to stand at the gate and watch for him. If she hadn't been asked to be at the gate she wouldn't have been there. She would have been peering from a window or a corner of the house.

The doctor came in sight at last. His horse was on the gallop, and he was in a hurry to reach his patient, but he might have cast just one look at the figure in white at the gate.

Of course, a hired man had broken a leg, and, of course, the sooner the leg was attended to the better, but deliberately to ignore a good-looking girl, the same as he did the roadside hitching posts, was a black mark against him. It was perfectly natural that Miss Molly should walk into the house and announce to the aunt that from what she had seen of Dr. Flint she didn't believe he knew enough to set the broken leg of an old rooster.

Two hours lattr, the girl was at the gate again. Not because the doctor had fixed things up and was ready to go back to town, but to see the sunset. The view from the gate was fine. Miss Molly was now in pink. She was in pink to match the sunset. If the doctor couldn't see a girl in white he might see one in pink, but odds was the difference anyway.

He drove right past looking straight ahead of him, as if he were the only man in the county, and the glance of contempt and indignation sent after him did not even make him shiver.

"Did you see him go?" asked the aunt as the niece returned to the house.

"I saw somtthing or somebody in a gig, and it might have been he," was the indifferent reply.

"I suppose he is worried about his patient."

"I don't see why. It's nothing but a broken leg. Any sawbones can set a broken leg. He'd better worry about other things. He'd better worry about his eyesight. I think he is near-sighted!"

"Why, I never heard of it!"

"Almost blind, I should say, and I don't care if he is!"

"Why, dear, how hard-hearted you are! I must go over and see Mrs. Johnson to-night and ask her if the doctor had trouble in seeing the leg. Maybe he borrowed her spectacles."

At ten o'clock the next forenoon, Miss Molly Cranshaw had to wander down to the gate to drive away a pig that was squealing to get in.

She was about to recross the road when the doctor came driving by. She had on a blue morning dress this time, and anybody but a blind man could have seen her when yet half a mile away. Did Dr. Flint see her? No! As he came up and drove past he turned his face toward the farmhouse as if looking for her in that direction. Miss Molly stooped down and picked up a stone, but he was too far away, and so she threw it over the fence at the calf.

"See anything of the doctor when you were out?" asked the aunt five minutes later.

"I saw a thing in a gig or something drawn by an old horse or somebody I think it stopped at Johnson's or somewhere!" was the reply.

Aunt Hilda looked at her niece in a puzzled way, but made no reply. She saw that the girl was out of sorts but laid it to some other reason than the true one. Ten minutes later Miss Molly began to feel a sort of recklessness come over her. She felt like going out and standing in the middle of the road and forcing the doctor to stop or run over her when he headed for town. She wandered back down to the gate, picking up stones as she went and trying to plan something, and she reached it to find the very thing at hand.

If Dr. Flint had hitched his horse, the halter had in some way become untied, and the animal was grazing along the highway instead of taking to its heels. Without stopping an instant to think, the girl gathered up the trailing lines and climbed up into the gig. Just what she was going to do she didn't know, but the horse settled that question by heading for the village on a gallop. There were half a dozen yells and screams, and Aunt Hilda got out to the gate in time to see only a cloud of dust down the road. She was looking and wondering when the doctor came along and asked:

"Have you seen my horse anywhere along here?"

"And my niece has gone, too!" almost shouted the woman.

"Would she take the horse and gig?"

"Oh, I don't know, but she never drove a horse and may be dead by this time! Hurry up, doctor—run every step of the way! If you find her all smashed up into kindling wood—"

No. Miss Molly never had driven a horse, and when she found herself being run away with she had the sense to drop the lines and hang on to the gig and let the horse settle the matter. He ran for a mile, and he would have kept on to his stable, had not a country constable, standing at his gate and wondering how he could make a fee, stepped out and stopped him. Then he said to the cowering young woman in the gig:

"Horse thief, eh? As it happens, I know this rig, and you can consider yourself under arrest. Climb down and stand right here. The doctor will probably be along soon, and if you attempt to escape I shall feel justified in shooting!"

Dr. Flint found his rig in good condition, also, a girl in tears; also a constable who declared that it was the most brazen crime of the century, and that he had a photograph of himself in the house in case any newspaper wanted it in its write-up. Miss Molly was invited to get in and be conveyed back home. When the wondering horse had been turned around the doctor asked her:

"How did you come to do it?"

"Because you—you—"

"Because I wouldn't notice you, eh?"

"Y—es, I guess so."

"I didn't notice you because I saw from afar off that you were stuck on yourself."

"I'm no such thing!"

"It is true!"

"Let me out this instant!"

But the horse was kept on the trot until he had delivered her into Aunt Hilda's arms, and then he said to the blushing, angry girl:

"I say it's true, and I'm going to call and argue it out with you. Good-day."

And two weeks later, as Aunt Hilda was washing up the dinner dishes, she paused to say to herself:

"It's dreadful early to predict yet, but Josiah and me met in a quarrel, just as they have, and he has since told me that he was in love with me in less'n three days. Good lands, there is the doctor again!"

Working Philanthropist.

There are philanthropists and philanthropists in the world. Some who are helpful and some who are demoralizing in their benevolent efforts, but we believe a Spirit Lake citizen holds the belt as a practical giver. To illustrate: Last summer he met a semi-tramp working in the hot sun, one shoulder exposed and badly blistered. "Why don't you put on a better shirt?" asked the philanthropist. "Haven't got one," was the reply. "Will you put mine on if I give it to you?" was the prompt interrogation, and the reply "yes" came by wireless. Right then and there the philanthropist pulled off a good shirt, and the laborer was comfortably clothed. On another occasion this citizen took off a pair of warm woolen socks on a bitter cold day and exchanged them with an aged and feeble friend for a pair of wet cotton hose. Such acts of benevolence at a critical time are what count.—Spirit Lake (Iowa) Beacon.

Some Ancient Vessels.

What is the oldest ship in the world and still in active service? According to a Paris contemporary, the mercantile marine of Denmark possessed 10 ancient steamers varying from 14 to 68 tons, the oldest of which was built in 1723 and the youngest in 1810. They are all engaged in carrying granite and other heavy cargo in the Baltic and North sas. The name of the "eldest sister" is the Constance, of 27 tons, as she has seen 186 summers. It is almost needless to add that these ancient "sisters" are constructed of wood.

Expressed Differently.

"Madam, you ought to go to a warmer climate."

"For once, doctor, you and my husband are agreed, but he expresses the idea in more emphatic language."

A Diplomatic Official.

During the reign of Emperor Napoleon III. he and the empress visited Normandy and had arranged to spend a couple of days at Evreux. M. Janvier de la Monte, who was the prefect, learned that the revolutionaries intended to hiss the sovereigns as they passed, and so he summoned the leaders of the movement and told them that he knew of their plot. "If you carry out your plan," said he to them, "you will get six months in prison. If you do not your friends will accuse you of cowardice and treason. As a way out of the difficulty I propose to lock you up at once until the emperor has gone." The conspirators accepted the terms offered them, and so the emperor was greeted only by cheers, as the revolutionaries, frightened at the arrest of their chiefs, had not dared to utter a sound. After the emperor and empress had gone the prefect went in person to release his prisoners, who had had such a pleasant time that they greeted him with cries of "Long live the prefect!" to which M. Janvier de la Monte, who was a man of wit, replied, "My friends, do not overdo it."

Settling a Matrimonial Dispute.

Mme. Sada Yacco, the famous Japanese actress, who had been a friend of the assassinated Prince Ito from her childhood, told the following amusing anecdote:

"In my frequent quarrels with my husband we sometimes asked Prince Ito to judge between us. One day when we had had a more than usually violent dispute at Chigasaki the prince came in unexpectedly, and I asked him to decide the question. But he declined, while proposing the following solution:

"'Go down into the garden, both of you, and fight it out like sumo tori (wrestlers). The one that wins will naturally be the one who is in the right.'

"No sooner said than done! In a trice Kawakami and I were in wrestling trim. By good luck my husband was just recovering from a serious illness, and as he was very weak I soon threw him to the ground. This amused the prince enormously, who, of course, had foreseen the end of the unequal match."

Cemeteries Where Women Gossip.

Friday, the Sabbath of the Moslems, when all true believers of the masculine gender make a point of going to church, their wives, sisters and daughters resort to the cemeteries and wail for the dead. But all their time is not spent in weeping, and sorrow is not the only emotion they display, on these occasions. They take with them bunches and garlands of flowers and decorate the graves of their relatives and pray and weep over the dead for a time. Then when this pious duty is performed they gather in little groups and have a good time gossiping about the living. Thus the day of mourning is very popular among the Moslem women. It gives them almost the only opportunity they have of cultivating the acquaintance of their neighbors.

The Lion and the Unicorn.

The unicorn came into the royal arms with James I. It belongs to the royal arms of Scotland. The signet ring of Mary, mother of James, is in existence, having a unicorn on it. In the royal arms, therefore, one supporter represents England, the other Scotland.

The lion and the unicorn occur also in ancient Buddhist scriptures, placed together as supporters. Both of these animals also are seen playing draughts together in the well known Egyptian painting. But the oldest connection of the two is in the blessing of Jacob and of Moses. — London Notes and Queries.

Would Have Cost Him His Life.

Oscar Bowman, Lebanon, Ky., writes: I have used Foley's Kidney Remedy and take great pleasure in stating it cured me permanently of kidney disease which certainly would have cost me my life." Upchurch Drug Co.

An Indigestion Remedy Free

Many people who are otherwise healthy suffer from indigestion, or dyspepsia. When you consider that the stomach and allied digestive organs are the most important organs of the body, it would seem that a disorder there is to be taken very seriously.

Dyspeptics cannot eat the things they like; food sours in the stomach; then chronic constipation begins, or, as is often the case, you have been constipated all along, and the stools are forced and irregular.

But there is no use letting indigestion go until it becomes chronic and undermines your health. It is good advice to suggest to you that you go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the wonderful cure for stomach, liver and bowel troubles. That is what C. Fowler, of Carson City, Mich., did and he is well today. Others who did the same and are cured are Ida A. Fortune, of Grand Junction, Tenn., B. F. Thompson, of Shenandoah, Ia., who actually considers that it saved his life. You can obtain a 50-cent or $1 bottle of the druggist, and, taken according to directions, it will probably be all you need. It is a liquid, acts gently, never gripes, and besides the laxative effect, contains exceptional tonic properties which tone the stomach, and that is what is especially needed in indigestion.

All sufferers from indigestion who have never used Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can obtain a free test bottle by writing the doctor. It will be sent direct to your home without any charge. In this way thousands have proven to their own satisfaction Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the very remedy they needed to cure indigestion. When once you use this grand remedy you will throw violent cathartics, tablets, salts, etc., away.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 509 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Pigeon Whistles of Pekin.

The smallest musical instruments in the world are the pigeon whistles of Pekin. They are made of thinnest bamboo and tiny gourds scraped to paper-like delicacy and fastened beneath the tail feathers of the carrier pigeons. As the birds fly through the air these instruments emit a weird aeolian melody like the harps of fairyland. Every morning and afternoon the vault of Pekin's sky is swept by these sweet, mournful notes as the birds fly to and fro, carrying messages to the bankers, the merchants, the lawyers, invitations, letters, stock quotations, a system older than the telegraph or telephone or the oldest letter service, as old as time itself. There are some twenty different kinds of pigeon whistles, some of them simple bamboo tubes with but one top and some as elaborately constructed as miniature organ pipes. They are all of featherweight lightness and when held in the hand and swept through the air emit the same delicate whistling notes as when borne through the upper atmosphere by the carrier pigeons.

Second Thought.

"Dear Mr. Hicks," she wrote, "I am very sorry that what you ask I cannot grant. I cannot become your wife. Yours sincerely, Ethel Barrows." Then she added: "P. S.—On second thought, dear George, I think I will [illegible] Do come up tonight and [illegible] true Ethel."

Can Walk Now.

Many people in the Southern States have been cured of Kidney and Bladder diseases after physicians have failed, by using U RA-CURA. Mr. J. Gallual, of Cleveland, Ala., writes: "I can recommend your U. RA-CURA to neighbors. It has done me wonderful good. I am on my eighth bottle and can walk now. I was past walking only when they helped me—suffered from Kidney and Bladder troubles. I am grateful to U RA CURA. Druggists sell this incomparable remedy at 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle. HINTS FOR FARMERS

The Profitable Hog.

In my judgment, the large type Poland-China is the profitable hog of today, writes an Iowa hog raiser in the American Agriculturist. When I say large hogs I mean hogs that will weigh 750 to 850 pounds at maturity, and sows that will weigh 600 to 700 pounds at maturity fat. This size can be produced and yet have quality, be a quick grower and easy feeder. We must keep in mind individuality as well as size, broad not only across the back, well sprung ribs, long deep body, loins, long, deep sides, strong hams, long, deep sides, strong hams, broad and short pasterns. The head should be characteristic of sex; a boar's head should be broad and masculine, this being an indication of a strong, vigorous animal. The sow's head should be smooth and feminine, which indicates a quiet disposition. A short, smooth coat of fine quality, and a hog with that kind of coat will respond quickly to feed, while a wavy, rough coated hog is generally a slow grower and a hard feeder. In speaking of the large type I do not mean the extremely large, coarse shaped hog which has neither style nor formation nor quality. Any practical hog man knows that we must have a hog that will fatten in his pig form, to be a profitable one. The big, coarse hogs are not profitable.

Hancock Disinfectant.

A good disinfectant for painting roosts for lice and mites is made as follows: Shave one ten cent cake of laundry soap into one pint of boiling water. Heat or allow to stand until a soap paste is formed. Stir in one pound of commercial cresol and heat or allow to stand until the soap paste is dissolved. Stir in one gallon of kerosene. Cresol is a coal tar product and may be obtained from the druggist at about 30 cents per pound. Care should be taken not to get any of it upon the hands or face, as it will cause intense smarting. Use as a lice paint apply undiluted.

Some poultry raisers have dipped fowls of like by dipping the fowls in a diluted stock dip. This is probably no more satisfactory than thorough dusting and is much more upon the fowls. If it is deemed advisable to dip the fowls, the formula given above, diluted with parts of water, makes a good wash. Dipping should be done in the morning of a bright warm sunshiny day, in order that the birds may be thoroughly dry before night comes on.

Hog Wisdom.

For winter feeding, cooking, soaking and steaming feed is advised. It makes a good bulky feed and helps to keep the hogs in good growing condition.

If the pigs show any signs of being "off feed" give a little epsom salts for a day or two.

Many pigs suffer from the effects of worms in the intestines and stomach. Feed might almost as well be thrown away as given to a pig infested with worms and can be fed in small doses at the rate of a teaspoonful to the hundred pounds pig.

Do not feed the pigs for about twenty-four hours and then give them only to a few at a time or in small lots, that none may get an overdose.

If the pigs do not thrive with good care and generous feed, which is very often found to be the case, worms is the reason. Such cases should not be neglected.

The Aeration of Soils.

Experiments have shown that a cubic foot of soil from drained land is much lighter than the same amount of soil from undrained land. Soils that have been thoroughly drained by artificial means, therefore, that is, soils that contain more pore space, are to that extent in a condition that is desirable because it more readily admits of the admission of air in between the soil particles. Where the water is not removed from a compact soil from which it has only outlet is through the surface by evaporation, and this has two undesirable effects. In the first place evaporation cools the soil, while in its stead to replace the upward movement of water tends to exclude the air. The latter, of course, in the absence of which plants suffocate just as animals do when the supply of oxygen is insufficient.

Variety For the Hog.

A horse that does not work may be healthy, but of course it is not worked too easily. A thick coat of hair often prove to be the only cause of this, although a constitutional disease sometimes also partly at fault. Sometimes the horse to feel depressed and lazy would show ambition if put under local order. A steady diet of hay is not enough, be sure to feed a warm bran mash once a week and a good feed of potatoes occasionally, or some linseed meal.

The Care of Calves.

When calves crave wood it is a sign of an excessive acid condition of the digestive organs. They crave wood to neutralize an acid condition. Give them a teaspoonful of baking soda in milk twice daily for a week.

Grain For the Colt.

A fair allowance of grain for a colt, measured in oats, would be: Up to one year of age, one to two pounds; one to two years, two to five pounds; two to three years, seven to eight pounds.—Agriculturist.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

The Profitable Hog.

In my judgment, the large type Poland China is the profitable hog of today writes an Iowa hog raiser in the American Agriculturist. When I say large hogs I mean boars that will weigh 750 to 850 pounds at maturity and sows that will weigh 600 to 750 pounds at maturity fat. This size hog can be produced and yet have quality, be a quick grower and easy feeder. We must keep in mind individuality as well as size, broad, nicely arched back, well sprung ribs, long, deep, full hams, long, deep sides, strong, heavy bone and short pasterns. The head should be characteristic of sex. The boar's head should be broad and masculine, this being an indication of a strong, vigorous animal. The sow's head should be smooth and feminine, which indicates a quiet, motherly disposition. A short, smooth coat shows quality, and a hog with that kind of coat will respond quickly to feed. While a wavy, rough coated hog is generally a slow grower and a hard feeder. In speaking of the large type I do not mean the extremely large, ill shaped hog which has neither conformation nor quality. Any practical hog man knows that we must have a hog that will fatten in his pig form to be a profitable one. The big, long, coarse hogs are not profitable.

Henroost Disinfectant.

A good disinfectant for painting henroosts for lice and mites is made as follows: Shave one ten cent cake of laundry soap into one pint of soft water. Heat or allow to stand until a soap paste is formed. Stir in one pound of commercial cresol and heat or allow to stand until the soap paste is dissolved. Stir in one gallon of kerosene. Cresol is a coal tar product and may be obtained from the druggist at about 30 cents per pound. Care should be taken not to get any of it upon the hands or face, as it will cause intense smarting. For use as a lice paint apply undiluted.

Some poultry raisers have rid their fowls of lice by dipping the birds in a diluted stock dip. This is, however, probably no more satisfactory than a thorough dusting and is much harder upon the fowls. If it is deemed advisable to dip the fowls, the cresol formula given above, diluted with fifty parts of water, makes a good solution. Dipping should be done in the morning of a bright, warm, sunshiny day in order that the birds may become thoroughly dry before night.—Homestead.

Hog Wisdom.

For winter feeding clover needs cutting and steaming. Fed with grain it makes a good bulky food and helps to keep the hogs in good growing condition.

If the pigs show any signs of being "off feed" give whole or crushed oats for a day or two.

Many pigs suffer from the effects of worms in the intestines and stomach. Feed might almost as well be thrown away as given to a wormy pig.

Turpentine is a good remedy for worms and can be fed in sloppy feed at the rate of a teaspoonful to a fifty pound pig.

Do not feed the pigs for about twenty-four hours and then give the dose to a few at a time or in small lots, that none may get an overdose.

If the pigs do not thrive on good care and generous feed, worms are very often found to furnish the reason. Such cases should not be neglected.

The Aeration of Soil.

Experiments have shown that a cubic foot of soil from drained land is much lighter than the same amount of soil from undrained land after both have been thoroughly dried out. This means, therefore, that a drained soil contains more pore space, and porosity is desirable because it means the admission of air in between the soil particles. Where the water is not removed from a compact soil from below its only outlet is through the medium of evaporation, and this has two undesirable effects. In the first place evaporation cools the soil, while in the second place the upward movement of water tends to exclude the air, and, of course, in the absence of air the roots suffocate just as animals suffocate when the supply of oxygen is insufficient.

Variety For the Horse.

A horse that does not sweat is not healthy, but of course it may perspire too easily. A thick coat of hair will often prove to be the only reason for this, although a constipated habit is sometimes also partly at fault, causing the horse to feel depressed where he would show ambition if in good physical order. A steady diet of oats and hay is not enough; he should have a warm bran mash once a week, or a good feed of potatoes or apples occasionally, or some linseed oil or oilmeal.

The Care of Calves.

When calves crave wood or other unnatural substances it is an indication of an excessive acid condition of the digestive organs. They need an antiacid, the same as when cows eat bones to neutralize an acid condition. Give them a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda in milk twice daily.—Farm Journal.

Grain For the Colt.

A fair allowance of grain for the colt, measured in oats, is as follows: Up to one year of age, two to three pounds; one to two years of age, four to five pounds; two to three years of age, seven to eight pounds.—American Agriculturist.

WILSON HITS NAIL SQUARELY

Secretary of Agriculture Explains High Cost of Living by Saying Too Many Distributors.

They have all been trying to explain why the high cost of living, and to account for all the trouble it seems to be making. Not one of the way-up politicians and—well—statesmen, have come within a mile of the real cause until Secretary Wilson found time to express himself the other day when out came the exact facts in the case, says Dakota Farmer. The secretary said he is organizing his forces as fast as possible so as to make a thorough investigation and a searching inquiry into the reasons underlying the unreasonable difference between the wholesale and retail price of food products.

This is one thing which he hopes will cast some light upon the subject, but he continues:

"Too many persons are engaged in the business of distribution. What we need is more farming. Too many persons are rushing to town and city and trying to make a living there, and not enough are staying in the country. Too many persons are trying to get along without work, and not enough of them are in the business of producing something.

"One man could do the business of distribution where 20 are now engaged in it. That is the reason why the cost of living is high and people are complaining. People must learn that they cannot get along without work, and the best place for them is on the farm, where they can raise something."

Here is the point exactly. People have decided to live in the city whether needed there or not, and the only way to do this is to become middle men of one kind or another. This is the prime reason why so many cry out when the producer buys anything direct from the manufacturers. "The world owes us a living," these people say, but they propose to get that living handed over to them where they please to ask for it, and largely by intercepting what the producer sells and what he buys.

It is useless for these people to say "I don't like farming; and if I did, land's too high."

Nonsense! An ignorant young foreigner who cannot even speak our language will land here next spring in debt for his passage, and inside of ten years, if he has the good sense to go onto the cheap lands of Dakota or Montana or on to the $7 to $10 lands of central and northern Minnesota, will own his own self-supporting farm home, and ride in his own carriage after his own horses. We have seen it done time and again within that time, and it will be done for years to come. The writer did it himself in the backwoods of Wisconsin and on the prairies of Dakota, and could do it again to-day if he had to, and would have a good time doing it, too.

This kind of talk might do in the old country where land is out of reach, but here in a country which until lately has been giving good land away in 160-acre chunks, it is useless to make such statements. Mr. Wilson has it right: "Too many are trying to get along without work," or hardships of any kind. They think, or try to, that somebody, somehow or some way, ought to hire them and pay them wages and let them live where they please." Mr. Wilson is eminently right.

EASTER AND REVIEW

Sunday School Lesson for March 27, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

GOLDEN TEXTS.—"Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people."—Matt. 4:23.

"I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for ever more."—Rev. 1:18.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

These two "Golden Texts" express the truth and suggest the methods of one of the best and most interesting of Easter lessons.

For they teach us the most important truths we need to know for our life here and for our life forevermore:

That the Jesus who once lived in Palestine and did the works we have been studying,

Showing the love of God for man,

Teaching the eternal truths of heaven,

Expressing in visible forms the loving kindness of our Heavenly Father,

Setting us a perfect example,

And giving his life that we should not perish but have eternal life,

This same Jesus is really living today as he was then on earth.

He is with us now as when he dwelt in Galilee,

Is now inspiring the same life,

Teaching the same truths,

Doing the same works,

Is our present King, Saviour, Helper, Guide and Friend.

To realize these things will make a blessed Easter day. The teacher can take up the lessons one by one with his scholars and show that the Risen Saviour is our present Saviour.

We are tempted. Jesus is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities" since "he was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin."

We study the laws of his kingdom, and we know he who "as a Son learned obedience by the things which he suffered;" "became, unto all them that obey him, the author of eternal salvation," "for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you."

The review of Lessons IV. to IX. will bring these truths to mind.

We have been studying his good deeds to the bodies and souls of men. Jesus the living Saviour, is continually here and now fulfilling his promise, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to the Father."

Lessons X. to XII. show what these works are.

BEGIN THE YEAR WITH CHRIST

No Period Can Be Happy or Beautiful Where the Lord Is Left Out.

One reason why life is so serious is because we must give account of it all. Jesus hinted at the large meaning of this truth when he said that for every idle word that men speak they must give account. If for the idle words—light, trivial, empty words—how much more for the words which are filled with bitterness, or with malice, or with the evil of falsehood, of envy, of irreverence! We are not done with life as we live it; we shall meet it all again.

These things being true, how should we enter upon the new year? For one thing, we should begin it with Christ. Who is sufficient for the serious problems of living without the divine grace and help? There is no other hand that can guide us safely through the new and strange experiences.

Another suggestion for a prosperous new year is that we should fill its every hour with duty well done. Duty is a large word. It includes all that we owe to God—honor, love, obedience, faithfulness. It includes all that we owe to men. No year can be happy or beautiful with God left out.

The only way to have a year at its close stainless and beautiful, is to keep the days, as they pass, all pure and lovely with the loveliness of holy, useful living. It is in little days that our years come to us, and we have but the one small fragment to fill and beautify at a time. God never gives us years, or even weeks. He gives us only days. If we live each day well, all our life will, in the end, be radiant and beautiful.—Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D.

A Great Christian Man.

Gladstone was a member of parliament seven years before Queen Victoria ascended the throne, and was as great a figure in the world's eye as the queen when she celebrated her sixtieth regal anniversary. He was great in the splendor of his setting sun, sublime, as his death approached, as he discoursed of God, of the forgiveness of sins, of the great hereafter, and made sublime in the eyes of all men when his lifelong opponent, Lord Salisbury, conferred on him the highest title that even the Creator himself can bestow upon a human being: "A great Christian man."—Dr. J. M. Buckley, in the Christian Advocate.

Value of Church Attendance.

No danger is more subtle or fatal than the philosophy which disparages the value of church attendance. Break up the Christian assembly, and Christ's grip upon the nation is broken. The sense of God and the sense of sin, the august beauty of truth and the high dignity of duty, the sweetness of communion and the raptures of heaven, all these are heightened and made real in the great congregation. We kindle one another and lift up one another when as brethren we meet to meditate and pray.

The "Long" Sitzes.

The Sitze family was long in person, long drawn out in speech and eternally long about doing things. Over miles of pine hills they were known as the "long" Sitzes. Miss Lydia, the eldest, went to a crossroads store to buy Christmas presents. In the course of a half hour she became interested in some blue and scarlet petticoats.

"I'll take one of these petticoats," she said, slowly counting out the price.

The busy proprietor wrapped up the parcel and handed it over with a polite "Something else?"

"I'll take another petticoat."

He did up a second bundle, took her carefully counted money and was turning to the next impatient customer.

"I'll take another petticoat," came the slow drawl.

This went on to the seventh time. The man, being up to his ears in work, ventured a question:

"Buying for the neighborhood, Miss Lydia?"

"I'm buying two apiece for my sisters."

"How many sisters have you?"

"Nine."—Youth's Companion.

The Ingenious Magpie.

The magpie is nothing if not ingenious. He always barricades his bulky nest with thorn branches, so that to plunder it is by no means an easy matter, but when circumstances oblige the "pie" to build in a low bush or hedge, an absence of lofty trees being a marked feature of some northern localities, he not only interlaces his home, but also the entire bush, in a most formidable manner. Nor does he stop here. To "make assurance double sure" he fashions a means of exit as well as an entrance to the castle, so that if disturbed he can slip out by his back door, as it were.—London Graphic.

John and the Franchise.

A woman suffrage lecturer in England recently brought down the house with the following argument: "I have no vote, but my groom has. I have a great respect for that man in the stables, but I am sure if I were to go to him and say, 'John, will you exercise the franchise?' he would reply, 'Please, mum, which horse be that?'"

A Real Regret.

Editor—I am obliged to decline your poem with thanks. I am very sorry, but— Poet—But what? Editor—The management insists upon my declining all poems that way.

Fire.

Max Beerbohm's book "Yet Again" opens with the essay on "Fire."

"Fire in my grate," he writes, "is as terrible a thing as when it was lit by my ancestors night after night at the mouths of their caves to scare away the ancestors of my dog. And my dog regards it with the old wonder and misgiving. Even in his sleep he opens ever and again one eye to see that we are in no danger. And the fire glowers and roars through its bars at him with the scorn that a wild beast must needs have for a tame one. 'You are free,' it rages, 'and yet you do not spring at that man's throat and tear him limb from limb and make a meal of him.' And, gazing at me, it licks its red lips, and I, laughing good humoredly, rise and give the monster a shovelful of its proper food, which it leaps at and noisily devours."

Capt. Begardus again hits the Bull's Eye.

This world famous rifle shot who holds the championship record of 100 pigeons in 100 consecutive shots is living at Lincoln, Ill. Recently interviewed, he says:—"I have suffered a long time with kidney and bladder trouble and have used several well known kidney medicines all of which gave me no relief until I started taking Foley's Kidney Pills. Before I used Foley's Kidney Pills I was subjected to severe backache and pains in my kidneys with suppression and often times a cloudy voiding. While upon arising in the morning I would get dull headaches. Now I have taken three bottles of Foley's Kidney Pills and feel 100 per cent better. I am never bothered with my kidneys or bladder and once more feel like my own self. All this I owe solely to Foley's Kidney Pills and always recommend them to my fellow sufferers." Upchurch Drug Co.

The First Pantomime.

The first pantomime introduced to the English stage was "Tavern Bilkers" and was by John Weaver. This was in the year 1702. It was produced at Drury Lane. The great institutor of pantomime in England was, however, John Rice, who devised this form of entertainment in 1717. His first emphatic success was in 1724, when he produced "The Necromancer; or, History of Dr. Faustus." So successful was Rich with his pantomimes that Garrick, Quin and others became exasperated. Rich lived to see pantomimes firmly established at Drury Lane and Covent Garden. He died in 1761.—London Stage.

Not a Bouncer.

"Mother," said a six-year-old hopeful, "isn't it funny that everybody calls little brother a bouncing baby?"

"Why do you think it's funny, Willie?" remarked his mother.

"Because when I dropped him on the floor this morning he didn't bounce a bit. He only hollered."

Elevating.

He Saw More Lights.

In one of the hotels recently some new electric lights were put in use in a decorative way. A young man who lives on the hill happened in during the evening and noticed the lights.

"They're very nice," he said to the head waiter, "but why didn't you put up more?"

The head waiter, knowing the young man's fondness for articles enumerated on the wine list, replied, "I think you'll see more of them before you leave, Mr. So-and-so."

The young man remained in the cafe a couple of hours and imbibed rather freely of liquid refreshments. When he got ready to leave he sought the head waiter.

"Much obliged to you," he said. "Did you put the extra ones in for me?"

"Certainly," replied the head waiter, bowing.

The young man left the hotel feeling greatly honored.—Denver Post.

Suppressing Swearing.

Profane as well as legal oaths have been the subject of many parliamentary measures in England. No fewer than five separate bills having the prevention of swearing for their object were presented during the reign of James I., but it was not until 1623 that an enactment was finally carried defining and controlling the offense. In 1635 a public department was established to collect the fines enforced by this law. The officials of this department, of whom one was appointed in every parish, were allowed 2s. 6d. in the pound on the money thus collected, and the balance was paid over to the bishop for the benefit of the deserving poor. These penalties ceased to be enforced after the restoration, but were revived by a statute of William and Mary and still further increased under George II.—London Scraps.

Saved A Soldier's Life.

Facing death from shot and shell in the civil war was more agreeable than J. A. Stone, of Kemp, Tex., is facing it from what doctors say is consumption. "I contracted a cold" he writes, "that developed a cough, that stuck to me in spite of all remedies for years. My weight ran down to 130 pounds. Then I began to use Dr. King's New Discovery, which completely cured me. I now weigh 178 pounds." THE MAN ON THE CORNER
Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

Thankful we all were to see the nice rain on Tuesday, a rain which was badly needed by the farmers as well as the dust driven citizens of the towns. Gardens look much better for it, and in fact the whole earth is benefitted and grateful for it, and we can get along without our sprinkler for another day or two.

Early risers, it is said, may see the comet a little before sunrise. I have not seen it and guess I'll wait for the evening performance a little later. Comets are wonderful things, and it may be another twenty-five years before the next one is visible, but I dont think I can get up before sunrise to look for Mr. Halley's comet.

A touch of last month is throwing itself in April, blustering windy days which properly belong in March are now the rule. But let it blow! Anyhow spring is here, the trees are budding, gardens are flourishing, all nature is in a gay mood, so why not you and I?

Talking of diversified farming, some fine asparagus, raised at Thorsby, is now on the Clanton market. It is a splendid vegetable and is grown to perfection in Thorsby.

Clanton now has a first class photo. Gallery. Mr. Scott has put in a skylight and fitted up a studio in the Reynolds building. Mr. Scott operated a studio in Birmingham for twelve years.

Mr. G. W. Armstrong of Jemison was a visitor here Saturday. He says that Randolph is building up, and that they have graded the streets and fixed the sidewalks of the town, making a great improvement.

Mr. R. H. Long of the Leal Coal and Company of Mountain Creek was in town Saturday. He gives a good report of the ore mining in that neighborhood and says the ore is of fine quality and of unlimited extent. They are finding employment for all the teams and all the men that apply.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

But four more weeks from Monday next to the Democratic primary, when to all intents and purposes the nominees for State offices will be elected—the November election being merely a ratification of the primary. And there was never a better opportunity for the Democrats of Chilton to elect men of their choice than the present.

It was said by a man recently who generally keeps well posted on political affairs in Chilton, that of the three hundred new voters fully eighty per cent may be expected to vote the Democratic ticket. I do not know how he arrived at his figures, but anyway it is to be hoped he is correct. With good men nominated for the several offices in the county there is every reason to hope that the sturdy and conservative voters of Chilton will act independently and cast their ballots for the nominees of the Democratic party. There are several good reasons for thus believing, not the least of which is the stand taken by some of the leaders of the opposition in the late amendment campaign.

The county candidates in the Democratic primary are all thoroughly well known to the people of Chilton county—all good men and true, most of them have been tried and never found wanting; an excellent reason for trying them again. Let every voter consider for himself the best man to fill the office and there is no fear of the result. The gates are open, fall in and march to the front, and let us have a decisive majority.

Clanton is a dry town—a very dry town it may be said. Even the streets are dry and oh! so dusty. The good citizens of Clanton have not the slightest objection to the town being dry in one respect, always provided there should be a limit to the dryness, but they have a most decided objection to being smothered every day with clouds of dust, and a subscription has been raised to furnish the town with a sprinkler, and soon it is hoped to see it in operation.

Some politicians who claim to be self-made, were evidently interrupted before the job was completed.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the People of the 15th Judicial Circuit:

I have held the office of Judge of this Circuit, which is composed of the counties of Montgomery, Elmore, Autauga, and Chilton, about three years, or one-half of a regular term. Have tried to discharge the duties of the office faithfully and impartially. Was reared on a farm in Tallapoosa county, adjoining this circuit, was graduated at Auburn in 1882, have resided in Montgomery nearly twenty-three years, practicing law until I went on the bench in 1907.

Have been a Democrat all my life, and have responded as best I could to every call of the party.

I seek re-nomination in the Primary to be held May 2, 1910, and earnestly solicit your support and influence.

I hope that an investigation of my record will reveal no valid reason why my fellow Democrats should depart from their custom of endorsing a faithful servant, in my case.

Touching my fitness for continuance in office to which you elected me in 1908, I refer you to any member of our Supreme Court, and to the lawyers of the circuit.

I shall be actively engaged in holding court from the 14th of March to the date of the Primary, with the exception of one week. Notice of opposition to my re-nomination did not reach me in time for a personal campaign on my part.

Your favorable consideration of my candidacy will be appreciated.

Most respectfully,
W. W. PEARSON.

ALFALFA GOOD FOOD

Meal From Plant to Become First Class Eating for Man.

Young Woman of Kansas Discovers Great Possibilities Hitherto Unsuspected in Plant Famous as Forage for Livestock.

Topeka, Kan.—Nourishing bread, delicious cakes and palatable pastry are to be made of alfalfa. Meal made from this forage plant is to become first-class food for human beings.

This is the prediction of Miss Ruth Ingham of Topeka, who was recently graduated from the Kansas Agricultural college, department of domestic science. With a view to establishing the merits of alfalfa as a food for the human family as well as for animals, Miss Ingham has made a number of experiments with alfalfa meal in foodstuffs and drinks which she considers very successful, although she has not finished her work. In a talk to the members of the Shawnee County Alfalfa club she explained the results of her experiments. The samples which she brought before the club were tried by those present and the verdict was that they were very good.

Miss Ingham's experiments so far have been bread, cakes and tea. The cakes, a goodly supply of which the young woman brought to the club meeting for test, were perhaps the most successful, as in this form of food raisins and nuts were used, which partially removed the decided "hay" flavor. In the bread the alfalfa taste was partially overcome by the admixture of other kinds of flour and caraway seed. The principal objection yet to be revode, Miss Ingham said, is the color. The alfalfa meal used thus far has been unbleached and when cooked turns a dark green, which makes the bread less appetizing. However, this fact did not deter the members of the alfalfa club from generously sampling the several big loaves which Miss Ingham had mixed and baked for the occasion.

Miss Ingham told the club members that her experiments with alfalfa leaves in the making of tea had not been entirely satisfactory. Alfalfa leaves have been mixed with tea and coffee and the results have been acceptable, but alfalfa brewed alone was quite a failure on account of its unpalatable flavor.

"I have used all these experiments on the family table," Miss Ingham said, "and the folks have been patient with me, but I find that people must get accustomed to the taste of alfalfa before they will learn to like it. It is like learning to eat olives, oysters and other foods; the taste must be cultivated. When this is done alfalfa may play an important part in the cost of living, as it is certain to add to the health and longevity of those who use it."

Miss Ingham did not touch upon the meat boycott in her talk before the Alfalfa club, but she discussed with interest the value of this new food. She stated that alfalfa has better food qualities than corn; that it has as much as meat and has the additional quality of not clogging the human system.

APOLOGIZES TO CUBAN CHIEF

Secretary of War Dickinson Expresses Regret for Interrupting Fishing Expedition.

Washington, D. C.—Since the return of Secretary Dickinson from his trip to Porto Rico and Cuba a story become known of a humble and sincere apology that the secretary of war of the United States made to President Gomez of Cuba, while he was in Havana.

The arrival of the Mayflower, with Mr. Dickinson aboard, in the harbor of Havana was without previous official notice. President Gomez was absent from the city on a fishing expedition. He was advised of the presence of the secretary and returned to the capital post haste.

When Secretary Dickinson was introduced to the president, he expressed his pleasure in meeting Mr. Gomez and then began his apology.

"Once I had planned to spend two weeks in a vacation up in Michigan fishing," the secretary is reported to have said. "I had bought a big outfit and was out on the water fishing when a fellow came out in a boat with a telegram that called me home to attend to some business. I said then I never would cheat a man out of a fishing expedition and I meant to live up to it. I feel ashamed at having been instrumental in depriving you of your trip. One who will deprive another of fishing is a mean man. I apologize."

Robinson Crusoe Honeymoon.

Amsterdam.—Jan Schaafsma, a Dutchman, and his newly married wife (whom he first met when she fell out of a boat on the Rhine, and he, then a Heidelberg student, rescued her) are now on their way across America to San Francisco, to embark for Kukuahaele, an almost deserted Hawaiian island where they have decided to live like Crusoes, instead of staying in their native land.

Butter and Eggs as Prizes.

Columbus, O.—At a card party given at Gibsonburg by J. L. Hart and wife, butter and eggs were offered as prizes, one pound of butter being the first prize and a dozen eggs the second. Several such parties are reported on the schedule for the future.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Senator Allds of New York.

Jotham P. Allds, state senator of New York, has been undergoing a most disagreeable experience. He was put on the grill charged by one of his fellows as a receiver of money for influencing legislation. Mr. Conger, his accuser, swore that Allds took a thousand dollar bill. Only a few weeks ago the accused statesman was elected Republican leader of the upper house of the New York state legislature. Now he has resigned that honorable position and become a humble soldier in the ranks.

The retired leader is a native of the state he has served for nearly thirteen years. Since 1896 he has been sent regularly to the legislature, first as assemblyman and in 1902 to the senate. Among his companions Senator Allds is known as big hearted and generous, but he is quick tempered and forceful in his determination to dominate. It is said of Mr. Allds that he likes to tell a story, but tells it poorly. One of his best has to do with a fellow senator with whom he once hunted in the Adirondacks. "If you're lost," said he, "remember the moss grows on the south side of trees." "But," said the other man doubtfully, "what if I don't want to go south?"

JOTHAM P. ALLDS.

Diplomacy of a Judge.

Judge Walter Evans of the United States district court ought to be in the diplomatic service, his friends say. He is known as a man of rare tact. The other afternoon Judge Evans had a gathering of Masonic brethern in his chamber at the custom house. Before the meeting opened an outsider strayed into the room. The outsider showed no signs of going, and, as the meeting was a private one, the Masons began to wonder how the outsider was to be got rid of. Judge Evans was equal to the occasion.

Approaching the intruder, he shook him warmly by the hand. "Are you a Mason?" he asked.

"Sorry, I'm not," replied the outsider.

"Well," observed the judge, "I was going to say if you were we would be glad to have you remain."—Louisville Times.

New Style Obituary.

Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, lamenting at a dinner in New York the frequency of American divorce, said, with a smile: "I shan't be surprised if the divorce movement keeps on to see in the papers a new style of obituary: 'Peter H. Harris, the well known broker, lost his wife last Wednesday by divorce. No flowers.'"

Once a Power in Politics.

Former Senator Thomas Collier Platt of New York, who not many years ago was a power to be reckoned with in national politics, has again come into the limelight. The reason for Mr. Platt's reappearance is due to the statement by Senator Allds of the New York legislature that Mr. Platt ordered certain legislation be sidetracked. Mr. Platt was the Republican state leader at the time, and

THOMAS C. PLATT.

Allds, who has been accused of receiving money to kill certain bills, avers that his party exercised pressure to influence his action. He produced letters to support his statement. The letters were from Senator Platt.

Since Senator Platt retired from the senate to give place to Elihu Root he has hardly been heard from. If he takes any interest in political matters he has not taken the public into his confidence. He is an old man now, nearing fourscore years, and is spending his declining years in the quiet of his country home.

EDUCATE THE GIRLS

Fitting Them for Career of Independence in Colonies.

Lady Ernestine Hunt, Daughter of Marquis of Aliesbury, Establishes School to Teach Rising Generation Useful Arts.

London.—Girls who have left boarding school have a great deal to learn before they are fitted to seek a career of independence in the colonies of the empire.

That is why Lady Ernestine Hunt, daughter of the fifth marquis of Aliesbury, has founded a colonial training school for girls at Cosham Park, near Portsmouth.

She is herself the acting principal of the school, and her aim is to give girls of 18 and upward training in those subjects which will be of most use to them in "fending for themselves and their homes, whether in the colonies or in England."

These subjects are highly practical, and include housewifery, home nursing, first aid, darning, riding, cooking, bedmaking, stable work and gardening.

Cosham house was found to be a delightfully situated residence, surrounded by seven acres of meadow and orchard, with boy scouts imparting a piece of the adventurous. The girls' term has not yet begun and Lady Ernestine, who takes great interest in boy scouts, has allowed one of the Portsmouth patrols the free run of the school and its grounds for a fortnight.

There were three horses in the stable for girl colonials to ride, and the space where next summer the girls will be able to sleep under canvas was pointed out.

Riding will be taught, both side saddle and astride, and single and pair driving, while girls who desire it may learn stable work.

Lady Ernestine has traveled and resided in Canada, South Africa and Australia, and is a well-known advocate of emigration for properly qualified and educated girls.

When they are weary of single life in the colonies, they will not lack offers of marriage, for there are hundreds of eligible Britons eager for such capable helpmeets.

Discipline and industry are insisted upon, and two references are required from each intending pupil, in addition to parental introduction.

Girls who do not wish to go to the colonies will be qualified to become housekeepers in large households or matrons.

No servants will be kept at Cosham park, and the girls will do the menial as well as more ornamental work. "Thorough" is the motto of the school.

Terms last from three to six months, and the fees, including everything but laundry and doctor, are made as moderate as possible, for middle class girls who have had a good school education are specially welcomed.

Every girl must bring a supply of aprons, glass cloths, cooking sleeves, gardening gloves, strong boots and short skirts.

Three hunts meet in the neighborhood, swimming baths are easily reached, there is a tennis court in the grounds, and the long line of the South Downs fills the northern horizon a mile away.

PLUG TOBACCO IS CAT'S FARE

Big Maltese Tomcat Rejects All Other Kinds of Food—Has No Ill Effects on Feline.

Rising Sun, Md.—For some time George Nesbitt of Woodlawn has been missing plugs of tobacco that he kept lying about the house. This remained a mystery until a few days ago, when, beneath the kitchen table, he discovered a big Maltese tomcat that came to his home for shelter recently, chewing away on a five-cent plug with an occasional growl.

Nesbitt caught the animal, which held the plug as if a mouse, and to see what effect the tobacco would have on the animal he confined it in a box and allowed it to finish its odd meal. The cat refused to partake of a saucer of milk placed within the box, but continued to devour the tobacco to the last flake, after which it went to sleep, never even becoming ill.

Nesbitt has tried the cat several times since with the new found dainty, which it never refuses, spurning all other food so long as it can eat tobacco.

120 Miles a Second.

Providence, R. I.—The new comet, which has been visible in the western heavens recently, is making a speed of more than 120 miles a second, according to calculations made by Prof. Winslow Upton of Brown university. Prof. Upton declared that the comet was speeding away from the earth and sun and that soon it will no longer be visible; it will be about 16,000,000 miles distant.

Irish Potatoes in Cotton Land.

Ozyka, Miss.—The farmers of this locality are making preparations to plant a large acreage in Irish potatoes. A truck farmers' organization has been perfected, and, in conjunction with that of the Diversified Crop Growers' association, it is expected to produce good results. The farmers are preparing to fight the boll weevil by living on products raised on their farms.

TEXAS COTTON GROWERS' AIMS

President Yeary Says They Are Broader Than Selfish Idea of Benefiting Any Class.

I have never heard anyone doubt the sincerity or honesty of purpose of the Texas Cotton Growers' association, but thinking possibly that some merchant, banker, railroad owner or employe, clerk or traveling salesman, manufacturer, day laborer, doctor, school-teacher, horse breeder or cattle raiser, minister of the Gospel, or the politician or some one else receiving an honest living from some source might say: "That is for the farmers and not me; I will not read what they have to say, it does not concern me."

Now, I want to here impress upon the minds of every citizen or person interested in Texas or the cotton growing states, that the objects and aims of the association are broader than the selfish idea of benefiting any one class or dozen classes, writes W. B. Yeary, president of the Texas Cotton Growers' association, in Farm and Ranch. We look upon the cotton plant is the heart of the south and its blood ebbs and flows in a financial stream to the financial pulses of every living soul in that section, and not alone to that section, but to the life blood to many others.

At this point allow me to say that millions are employed in raising and manufacturing things, not alone in Texas or the south, but throughout the world, the sale of which depends upon the profits of the cotton producer. So, the objects and aims of the association are to benefit all, and in return, we, as officers and workers of the association, expect everyone to assist and do his part; if he can do no more, he can rejoice when the weather conditions are right, he can express his gratitude for an upward turn in prices, and condemn anything that tends to reduce them; he can do some thinking along the line of what the cotton crop means to his business.

Those who are financially able can contribute to expenses of the organization. Those who have matured ideas of benefit to the industry should, therefore, consider it their duty to speak out. Everyone can do something, and everyone is directly responsible for short crops and low prices if he does not do what he can, and the effects must, of necessity, be laid heavier on him who can and does not help.

We invite the bankers' associations, the merchants' associations, the millers' associations and all commercial and industrial associations, to select some able man to prepare an address on "The Proper Marketing Methods of Cotton," and have it as a part of their program.

The cotton farmer buys your products, no matter what your business, and buys it in proportion to the profits derived from his cotton crop.

I most earnestly and sincerely hope the city, country, trades, and even the religious press, will watch the press dispatches and copy or produce some article as often as possible, in order to help our work along, for their success, too, lies very close to the cotton field, and the association has not the funds to send dispatches to all. I hope everyone who can will meet with us at our meeting in Waco, January 28, 29. Do not for a moment think you are not welcome, or that you have no business there. You are interested in what will be said and done, and you are a part of it. Come, let us have the largest and most enthusiastic meeting ever held in the state, and do some lasting good for all. Consider it not only your privilege but your duty to be there. Some of the best-posted men in the south will be there. If you should hear a banker making an argument for better methods, do not say the bankers are going to swallow it, if a manufacturer do not be afraid he will gobble the while thing up, if a farmer do not think it is for his benefit alone, the cotton crop is everybody's and the cultivation and marketing has been neglected so long that the task of correcting it is heavy enough to give all a reasonable amount of exercise, and the benefits will be distributed by natural trade laws and no one can divert them.

Billion Dollar Farmers.

American farmers have raised—for the crop is now safe in stack and warehousse—about 650,000,000 bushels of wheat, and prices are higher than at any time since the war, except in 1904, when the price at Chicago rose to $1.15.

Farmers sowed 32,000,000 acres of oats last spring, and the yield will be above 1,000,000,000 bushels.

The big crops of all kinds are due partly to increased acreage, but the billion-dollar farmer is the result of better methods of farming, of more intelligent coaxing and feeding of the soil and to economies in all departments of farm work that were not practiced ten years ago.

Value of Farm Help.

The hired man who takes notice of the broken rail or open gate, and remedies the evil at once, is of big value to his employer; but the hand with unseeing eye who waits to be told every little detail is an annoyance.

Prevent Barking Trees.

Painting the trunks of young trees with white lead and raw linseed oil, made as thick as house paint, will stop barking of trees by rabbits.

MISSIONARY TELLS OF WORK

Labor and Perils of Those Who Go Among Savages to Carry Gospel Message.

In the course of a lecture on "The Savages of New Guinea" at the London Institution, A. H. Dunning referred to Dr. Chalmers, the great missionary, who died in the island, and said that for many years there was no photograph of the Gonribardii tribe which murdered him. He placed on the screen a portrait of a savage who was not only a member of the tribe, but he had reason to believe was the actual man who struck Dr. Chalmers down and helped to eat him. A profile photograph of the same native showed an extraordinary receding forehead, the sign of a low type of humanity. The savage was taken prisoner in the course of a governmental expedition to recover the remains of Dr. Chalmers' fellow victim, Mr. Tompkins, and he was generally stated by the other natives to be the man who struck the missionary.

Mr. Dunning gave an amusing account of his adventures among the savages, one of his stories relating to a bottle of strong smelling salts. The first man who smelt, under the impression that it was a "white man's love charm," was so startled that he fetched a friend to try. Then they formed the salts into a sort of trust and scoured the neighborhood for recruits. Nobody gave the show away. They brought new people up one after the other, propped them up against a tree and sat round like Christy minstrels to wait for the result.

Kissing or fondling was unknown in New Guinea until the advent of the missionaries. These were seen kissing the children and the custom spread. Having been kissed by oily natives, he preferred the old style of salutation.

IMMENSE DEPOSITS OF SODA

Shallow Lake in African Valley, Twenty Miles in Extent, Covers Much Wealth.

Further details of the journey just concluded by Mr. Fred Shelford, the well-known engineer, in connection with the projected railway to be constructed from the Uganda railway to Lake Magadi, have been received.

This wonderful lake, which is only reached after a long and difficult journey over uninhabited and waterless country, is described as follows by Mr. Shelford:

"Lake Magadi is picturesquely situated amid weird surroundings at the bottom of a valley 2,000 feet deep. On one side are mountains 6,000 feet above sea level, and on another a range having an altitude of 8,000 feet.

"There is no sign of human life, but on and about the lake are immense numbers of flamingo.

"From the surrounding mountains the lake, which is ten miles long by two to three miles in breadth, looks like an ordinary sheet of water of somewhat reddish hue. On reaching the shores, however, we found that the water was only a few inches deep and covered a hard surface looking exactly like pink marble. This is an immense deposit of soda, which was bored and found to extend to a considerable depth, thus indicating an area of at least 20 miles of solid soda.

"The heat upon the soda lake was very great."

Brighton.

Brighton, which is patronized by kings and neglected by novelists, is not without its literary associations. Dr. Johnson was a frequent visitor in his later life, and a tablet to his memory was recently unveiled in the parish church of St. Nicholas, where he worshiped. In company with the Thrales, Charles and Mary Lamb were at Brighton in 1817, and Mary told Dorothy Wordsworth that she and her brother found the air of the Downs almost as good as the Westmoreland mountains. Among other Brighton lovers may be mentioned Fanny Burney, Horace Smith, Theodore Hook, Thackeray — who thought of "Vanity Fair" as a suitable title for his most famous novel while staying at the Old Ship—Dickens, Harrison, Ainsworth and Macaulay.—London Chronicle.

Opposed Use of Cocoa.

The use of cocoa, which was imported by the Spaniards from Mexico in 1520, was even more vigorously opposed than the use of tea itself in France. Cardinal Richelieu, for instance, in a letter to his brother Alphonse, says: "I cannot conceal from you my apprehension that the drug called chocolate, which you are using freely, may be harmful to your health, and I think it would be better for you to have recourse to ordinary remedies." Physicians went so far as to say that chocolate could cause a continuous and mortal fever.

Helps Poor Girls.

Mrs. James J. Storrow, wife of the Boston banker, is interested in a number of charities, among them being the girl's bowl shop. In the spare time which the girls have, they make pottery articles, which they sell, the money to be used for purposes of education. Mrs. Storrow has a girls' literary club, and every summer she spends a number of girls to the country, 14 at a time.

HOW TO LIVE ECONOMICALLY

Massachusetts Doctor Says Man Can Subsist on Twenty Cents a Day —Gives the Menu.

Cambridge, Mass.—In the midst of all the agitation over high prices and the meat boycott, Dr. Franklin White, of the Harvard Medical school, rises to remark that neither of these supposed-to-be-present calamities should cause the workingman one whit of worry.

Dr. White says that the ordinary healthful workman can live, on the outside, on 20 cents a day and grow fat, harbor his present strength and add constantly to it—in fact, obtain as much nourishment out of his cheap fare as his more fortunate brother who eats up $2 a day.

Americans sadly neglect nourishment in their foods, looking rather for the flavors and relishes rather than the muscle-building qualities.

Dr. White advocates the dried herring as a neglected delicacy, and says oleomargarine is a safe substitute for butter.

The old-fashioned oatmeal finds favor in his eye, and the potato also has its saving moments. The Boston baked bean also enjoys a high place in Dr. White's estimation. The doctor does not, however, believe in doing away entirely with meat, but thinks it should be eaten at one meal in moderation.

Dr. White's favorite menu, which should prove a solace to the hungry workman, is:

Breakfast.—Cornmeal mush, one cent; oleomargarine, 2 cents; syrup, one cent. Total four cents.

Lunch.—Potatoes, two cents; oleomargarine, two cents; smoked herring, one cent; cocoa shells and milk, two cents. Total, seven cents.

Dinner.—Beans, three cents; potatoes, three cents; cocoa, two cents; bread, one cent. Total, nine cents.

IRISH VS. ITALIAN METHOD

Former Is Decidedly the More Effective, Taking the Related Incident as Proof.

Rev. Sanford Culver Hearn, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church, Yonkers, is relating a street-car incident which concerns a conductor, an Irishman and an Italian. Each had given a dime to the fare-taker, but had received no change.

"I wanta da nick," complained the Neapolitan.

"You've got your nick. No more nicks for you. See?" And the conductor moved to the rear platform.

The Italian sat meekly in silence, but the Irishman employed different tactics. He went to the doorway.

"Gimme five cints change," said he to the conductor.

"You've got all the change you're going to get," was the retort.

"See here," exclaimed the Irishman, "you may play that chune on a hand organ, but you can't do it on a harp! Gimme five cints."

And he got it.—Judge.

He Could Not Recommend It.

The editor of the Plunkville Argus was seated at his desk, busily engaged in writing a fervid editorial on the necessity of building a new walk to the cemetery, when a battered specimen of the tramp printer entered the office.

"Mornin', boss!" said the caller. "Got any work for a 'print'?"

"I have," answered the editor. "You happened in just right this time. I've got only a boy to help me in the office and I need a man to set type for about a week. I have to make a trip out west. You can take off your coat and begin right now. I start to-morrow morning."

"All right," said the typographical tourist, removing his coat. "What road are you going to travel on?"

"The X., Y. & Z., mostly. I've never been on it. Know anything about it?"

"I know all about it. I've traveled it from one end to the other."

"What kind of a road is it?"

"Punk!" said the printer, in a tone indicative of strong disgust. "The ties are too far apart!"—Youth's Companion.

Failed in Health

"My mother died six years ago," writes Miss Ruth Ward, of Jerseyville, Ill., "and left me to care for six children. I had never been strong; and this, with the shock of her death, was too much for me.

"I failed in health. I was tired all the time and did not want to go anywhere, nor care for company. I had a headache all the time and such bearing-down pains.

"A very dear friend advised me to take Cardui, as it had done her so much good, so I commenced to use it and now I am in good health."

Women's pains are relieved or prevented and women's strength is quickly restored, by Cardui, the woman's tonic. You yourself know best if you need it, or not.

If you do need it, do not delay, but commence to use it at once. Every day of delay, only lets you slide further down the hill.

Don't wait, then, but begin to take Cardui today, for its help, no matter how prolonged, cannot harm you and will surely do you good.

BREAKFAST IN BED

LITTLE LUXURY THAT IS BECOMING THE FASHION.

Has Much to Recommend It to Those Whose Business or Household Cares Do Not Require Early Rising.

The breakfast-in-bed habit it spreading. It is not only becoming a habit, but it is becoming the fashion. Witness to this effect a well-known trained nurse, who has this to say on the question:

"It's wonderful how the breakfast-in-the-room habit has spread during the last year. Five years ago I can remember that this was considered a luxurious thing, and a breakfast tray was sent only to a guest or to some member of the family who had been out late the night before.

"About two years ago the breakfast tray became a very usual thing to expect, and now I find it almost universal in the homes where I go. Breakfast is served downstairs only for the men of the family, every other member, including myself, having a wonderfully equipped little tray sent to her room.

"Some of the breakfast sets are costly in themselves, not to speak of the different pieces of silver that are put on the tray. In one home where I nursed recently two butlers were kept busy from 8:30 in the morning until 10 carrying the various individual trays to the rooms, and the cook must have had a nice time of it remembering just which breakfast went on which tray.

"Often each member of the family has her own monogrammed breakfast set and the breakfast that each person likes must go on the special tray bearing the right monogram. Another distinction often made is the color, pink and white china going to the person having a pink room and the breakfast set decorated in blue being taken to the member of the family who has a blue room.

"In another home I remember the things belonging to one member of the family were always marked with a bowknot and another sister chose a butterfly. Their breakfast sets were decorated in this way, and the tray cloth and napkins embroidered to correspond.

"In another family where I sometimes go no two people ever had the same breakfast the same morning. It was a frequent question on meeting for the first time to inquire: 'Well, what did they give you this morning?' In that house I was often asked to suggest my favorite breakfast dishes, as it was expected that each person should have just what she wanted on her tray.

"In this family there was always one dish of either eggs, fish or meat on the tray, besides the usual fruit, cereal, hot bread or toast and coffee, but I find that in the homes of many very wealthy people this hearty breakfast dish is omitted and fruit, cereal, rolls and coffee are considered sufficient. Where there are a couple of sisters in the family their two trays are often taken into one room and they sit up in bed and eat their separate breakfasts, at the same time opening their morning mail. It's really a very pretty way of commencing the day.

"Even less luxurious people make use of the breakfast tray as an easy way of serving breakfast to a guest, and I've been in homes where the breakfast set was an inexpensive affair picked up here and there from the open patterns now show in variety in the big shops. By studying the dishes included in an expensive breakfast tray set and then picking out just what is essential a pretty set may be bought for $3 or $4, though the sets I often see in use must cost anywhere from $30 to $50."

MONOGRAM EMBROIDERY.

An effective and very distinct monogram for marking underlinen or handkerchiefs is shown here; it is worked in satin stitch with soft white or ingrain colored cotton.

Girls and Their Home Manners.

Who has not met the seemingly charming girl who is often being described as being quite different at "home?" She is quite different in the bosom of her family, because she is too cowardly to display the pettishness and bad temper anywhere else.

Girls who are pleasant to strangers and irritable and exacting at home are a type to be avoided and distrusted, says Home Notes. Home manners should be the test of character; and although it is easy to dissimulate, exposure will inevitably come in the long run to the girl who keeps her sharp tongue for her own people and silken speech for outsiders.

Many Want Joan Role.

London.—No fewer than 250 women have offered to impersonate Joan of Arc in the army pageant, in spite of the considerable achievements in the matter of riding astride and galloping in a suit of chain mail, required of the modern Maid of Orleans.

MADE THE AUDIENCE LAUGH

Singer's Selection of Song for an Encore Was Too Absolutely Inappropriate.

During the present musical season much popularity has been gained by a little song with the odd title, "It Is Not Raining Rain to Me; It's Raining Violet." It is a tuneful bit of melody and has been used for encore purposes with great success. It was during a recent recital that the quaint bit attained real distinction. The affair took place at the Rittenhouse on a wet, blustering evening, and as the night wore on the storm increased to the proportions of a blizzard. The wind arose until its roar blended weirdly with the music and the intermissions were punctuated by boisterous clatterings of hailstones against the windows. During the tenor solo by Paul K. Harper the storm reached the height of its fury and the applause which followed his effort was mingled with shrill echoings of the storm king's wrath.

As the singer arose for an encore a perfect deluge of rain smote the windows and when the orchestra struck up the tinkling prelude of the familiar air a smile broke over the audience.

"Swoosh!" went the torrent outside.

"Brrr!" shivered the audience.

"It is not raining rain—" began the tenor, but it was too much for even the politest of audiences and a storm of laughter followed that even included the soloist.—Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

Deer Run Wild in Boston.

Boston.—Six deer, including a large buck with fine antlers, were seen today in Mount Benedict cemetery in West Roxbury by Florence Lawler, the custodian.

It is believed the deer have been driven far from their usual haunts by difficulty in finding food under the heavy snow.

Many people anxious to see wild deer at large within the city limits went to the cemetery during the day, but the animals had disappeared.

SENATOR BANKHEAD.

In the three cornered race for the U. S. Senate it does appear that Senator Bankhead leads his two competitors and will secure his return to the senate by a comfortable majority. He has fairly earned an endorsement by the voters, having acquitted himself as their representative in a thorough business-like manner, honestly and conscientiously looking after their interests.

G. D RETHERFORD

The announcement of this well known gentlemen's candidacy for County Commissioner from the First District will be pleasonably received by his numerous friends and admirers. For more than twenty years he has been a resident of the district, always taking a keen interest in local affairs, and his nomination and election will redound to the credit of the county. A good farmer, an excellent business man, such men as he are needed as County Commissioners.

Hon. G. N. Hodge, a prominent banker of Lee County, Alabama, is the latest entry in the state campaign. Mr. Hodge is president of the Farmers National Bank of Opelika, President of the Hodge Home Mixture Guano Company of Lee County, and one of the foremost business men of the State. The Democrats of Lee County are enthusiastically and unanimously for Mr. Hodge. He has been Sheriff of his county and has many strong friends throughout the State who will take a lively interest in his campaign. It goes without saying that the Lee County man is going to have to be reckoned with in the contest now on.

Quick Justice at Ascot.

Not only the horses, but the powers of the law, says the London Chronicle, are swift at Ascot, for the course has a special tribunal for the punishment of evildoers. No sooner is the pickpocket, welsher or ticket snatcher arrested than he is standing in a little room in the royal stand, where the evidence is heard and the verdict and sentence pronounced before the offender fully realizes that he is caught. Nowhere else does punishment so swiftly follow crime as at this court, which is decreed by clause 31 of the indictable offenses act of 1848. This race course tribunal arose curiously in the eighteenth century from an assault upon a royal personage. In his indignation at the impossibility of instant punishment of the assailant he ordered that in future a magistrate should always attend the royal race meeting. This has ever since been done, and by the above mentioned act the chief magistrate of Bow street was constituted ex officio a justice of the peace of the county of Berks in order to enable him to hold this court at Ascot.

Natural Age of Man.

The question as to what is the natural age of man is by no means settled, of course, but many are of the opinion that the Frenchman Flourens was not far out of the way in his estimate of the time a man should live. Taking his observations from the group mammalia, of the class vertebrata, as having the closest resemblance to man and such species as are permitted to live the full term of their natural life under circumstances not admitting of error or doubt, Flourens found that their natural life extended to about five times the period of their lives from birth up to maturity. Applying the rule thus obtained to human life and taking the age at which the body is fully matured to be twenty years, he concluded the natural duration of the life of man to be 100 years.—New York American.

THE "I" HAVE IT.

Clanton, March 29, 1910.

Editor Banner: It has just been my pleasure and privilege of reading one of the most amusing and remarkable epistles and expostulations ever published or posted on the bill boards of the pike road that I have ever ever traveled along through this vale of tears. This amusing prodigy may be found upon the fourth of "The Union" published in the town or city of Clanton, Ala.

Well, if you will turn to and read the fifteenth Psalm of David, which sayeth "that he that teeteth not his own horn, verily the same shall not be tooted."

Now in our reading and analysis of that remarkable epistle "to the people" we notice first the preponderance of big "I's" saying nothing of the little "i's," and trying to arrange the same in concise order we get the following synopsis running to the number 83, as follows, 1st, I am asking the people; 2nd I had a well; 3rd, I hesitated; 4th, I was the man; 5th, I responded; 6th, I made the people; 7th, I would fill; 8th, I found; 9th, I could; 10th, I could not fill; 11th, I would resign; 12th, I can say that, 13th, I have tested the job, 14th, I deserve praise, 15th, I, alone should be condemned, 16th, I promised the people, 17th I lived to the end, 18th, I would then, 19th, I entered office; 20th, I have kept it up to this day this day; 21st, I live to see; 22nd, I commenced; 23rd, I have been in the thickest; 24th, I have not always; 25, I wanted; 26th, I have ever; 27th, I have never; 28th, I was; 29th, I have; 30th, I stood; 31st, I have fought; 32nd, I have never struck; 33rd I did; 34th, I could; 35th, I bolt; 36th, I did; 37th, I could; 38th, I have; 39th, I represented; 40th, I have; 41st, I would; 42nd, I refused; 43rd, I knew; 44th, I made; 45th, I was correct; 46th, I can; 47th, I fought; 48th, I now predict; 49th, I have tried; 50th, I have been faithful; 51st, I go; 52nd, I have done; 53rd, I have rendered; 54th, I have not tried; 55th, I did not like him; 56th, I have made a decision; 57th, I favored any man; 58th, I have endeavored; 59th, I believe the laws; 60th, I am not a lawyer; 61st, I never studied law; 62nd, I am willing; 63rd, I have always decided according to law; 64th, I understood it; 65th, I have tried to; 66th, I have tried to; 67th, I try to; 68th, I have recorded; 69th, I have attempted; 70th, I saw it; 71st, I have cost; 72nd, I am; 73rd, I will ever ask; 74th, I want to win; 75th, I will; 76th, I will; 77th, I want; 78th, I shall; 79th, I feel; 80th, I have; 81st, I can; 82nd; I am qualified; 83rd, I hope.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Sunday School of the M. E. Church South, at Clanton on the death of Charlie Lamar Wilson.

Whereas, in the providence of an all wise Father, He has seen best to remove from our midst one of our members, in the full bloom of his early life, being only eighteen years of age, therefore be it resolved.

1st, That we bow in humble submission to his will, feeling that in this dispensation of His providence, we have received an object lesson, on the uncertainty of life, and the certainty of death.

2nd, That in Charlie's death, we have lost a kind hearted friend, and we shall miss his cheerful smile, and genial companionship.

3rd. That we extend to his two brothers, Marvin and Will, our tenderest sympathy, and pray God's comforting spirit to be them, in this their second bereavement within the short space of two weeks.

4th, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the local papers, The Alabama Christian Advocate, and the two brothers.

Glennie Eugene Evans,

Equipment of Swiss Infantry Soldier.

The Swiss infantryman is very heavily burdened. Not to mention the weight of his uniform and the small tent on his back, in full marching order he must carry a load of 21.5 kilogrammes, and this comprises only a single reserve ration and one ration of bread. His haversack weighs 200 grammes more than the German haversack, his overcoat is heavier by 500 grammes, and in addition he carries a second pair of trousers (one kilo). His heavy rifle with bayonet weighs 5.4 kilogrammes. This weight exceeds that of the French rifle by 500 grammes, the German by 700, the Italian by 800, and the American rifle by 1,700 grammes. — La Vulgarisation Scientifique.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR VIEWS

The Alabama State Christian Endeavor Union has secured the famous Jerusalem slides illustrating the Christian Endeavor Globe. These pictures are the finest that could be procured, depicting the work of this wonderful army of more than three and a half million young people in every country in the world.

A real treat awaits the young people of Alabama who see these views at the coming State Convention in Anniston, Ala., April 15-17. The Convention is to be known as a practical one. Instead of the many long speeches which usually burden programs in meetings of this kind, there will be but few addresses, and those will be short, much time being given to conferences which will provide an opportunity for exchange of thoughts and plans for conducting and bettering the work of the Christian Endeavor Societies in this State.

The number of delegates appointed to represent the various Societies of Alabama at Anniston is increasing daily, and a Convention great in numbers as well as in influence, is assured.

JEROME O. WILLIAMS, Dis. Pres.

IN MEMORIAM.

On Wednesday, March 23, 1910, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Hayes and bore away the sweet spirit of their beloved little babe, Mattie Lavell. She just lacked a few days of being fifteen months old; she was only sick three days with pneumonia; everything was done to save the precious darling, but alas! God has seen fit to call her home. Weep not, dear bereaved ones, for the loss is heaven's gain. She only budded on earth to bloom in heaven. Oh, how sad it was to give her up; no one on earth can fill little Mattie's place; she had such a sweet disposition that made home happy. But Jesus hath said suffer little children to come unto me. She will be found beyond this vale of tears in the beautiful city of God.

As the death angel came and took her home may the all-wise God watched over her remains which were laid to rest in Pleasant Grove cemetery. Now may the guardian angel guide and direct the broken hearted and bereaved family to their journeys end and land them safely, on the other shore where they will meet their sweet little Mattie to never part no more.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

Death of Little Wallace Wilson.

The dear little baby of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Wilson passed from this world into the loving Savior's arms, Saturday night between 12 and 1 o'clock.

It was hard to give him up, but it was God's will and He knoweth best. He was a dear sweet little babe, and won the hearts of all who were around him. The bereaved father, mother and little sisters have our whole hearts sympathy.

ONE WHO LOVED HIM.

Saved A Soldier's Life.

Facing death from shot and shell in the civil war was more agreeable than J. A. Stone, of Kemp, Tex., is facing it from what doctors say is a double consumption. "I contracted a fearful cough, that stuck to me in spite of all remedies for years. My weight was down to 130 pounds. Then I began to use Dr. King's New Discovery, which completely cured me. I now weigh 178 pounds." For Coughs, Colds, La Grippe, Asthma, Hemorrhage, Hoarseness, Croup, Whooping Cough and lung trouble, it's supreme. 50c, $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by Upchurch Drug Co.

Are You Honest?

With your land when for the sake of saving a few dollars you use a fertilizer whose only recommendation is its analysis. It requires no special knowledge to mix materials to analyses. The value of a fertilizer lies in the materials used, so as not to over feed the plant at one time and starve at another. This is why Royster brands are so popular. Every ingredient has its particular work to do. Twenty-five years experience in making goods for Southern crops has enabled us to know what is required.

"I can't imagine, Lynne," expostulated her mother, "why you should want to go to the country in mid-winter."

"I can," declared her father, significantly.

Lynne's eyes of velvet softness glanced furtively in his direction and met an amused parental expression.

When she was on the train she found herself echoing her mother's surprise. After a ride of two hours she arrived at her destination, a little provincial town. She approached the man who drove the omnibus.

"I want a livery conveyance to take me to Nathan Chapman's farm. It is five miles out on the West road."

"Can't do it," was the laconic response.

"What shall I do?" exclaimed the girl in dismay.

"There's Bud Larkins," suggested an interested bystander. "He's got his bob sleigh. Bud, want a passenger?"

"Sure thing!" acquiesced Bud, coming forward.

Lynne climbed into the long sleigh and seated herself on the straw near the end. Bud touched up the horses and they were off at full speed.

They had to stop in town "to do the tradin'," Bud explained. It was growing dark; the north wind had risen, bringing an icy blast. Lynne noticed with apprehension that when Bud returned from his [illegible] "tradin'" he staggered. [illegible] had left the lighted [illegible] out in the countr[illegible] The horses [illegible] to have [illegible]

No; Mrs. Torrance is not at home. None of her family is except her brother. I—I don't know. Haven't heard it yet. He hasn't volunteered. It makes no difference."

"He seems amused at my plight," said Lynne, resentfully, as she hung up the receiver.

"I'm goin' over to the next farm to a sociable," announced Hannah Josephine from the doorway. "Si Fulks has come for me with his bob. He says the roads are cleared that way."

After her departure they made merry over her oddities, Lynne having a host of reminiscences of Hannah Josephine. Then they looked over the magazines and books that were on the library table. Their literary discourse was interrupted by the return of Hannah Josephine.

"For land sakes! be you folks settin' up yet? It's past midnight."

"But," argued Lynne, "you're up and so is Si."

"Yes, but we're keepin' company."

Lynne hastily bade her host good-night and went up the stairs with Hannah Josephine.

"I would really have liked to know his name," she was saying.

"Well, I swan! Come right back."

In spite of Lynn's protests she was led back to the library.

"I clean forgot my manners," explained Hannah Josephine, apologetically. "Miss Wendall meet Mr. Campbell—Mr. Gregory Campbell of Chicago."

"I see now," said Lynne, as she gravely acknowledged the introduction. "Why father [illegible] when [illegible]

Even Bartenders Scorn Any Coin of Less Value Than Twenty-Five Cent Piece.

Baltimore, Md.—"No pennies, nickels or dimes go in Alaska," said John Hoover of Fairbanks, who was in the city the other day. "When I first went to that country I saw bartenders look curiously at a dime that some tenderfoot had tossed on the bar and then sweep it off on the floor with their hands. I wondered at this contempt for real money, and asked some questions about it, discovering that no one ever took nickels or dimes, and that nothing could be bought in the Klondike for less than 25 cents.

"Take the ordinary sack of tobacco," continued Mr. Hoover, "which we get here for a nickel. There they cannot sell it for a quarter hardly, so they make it two for a quarter, but will not sell one for 15 cents.

"It is common cause among those people up there. They do not want nickels or dimes introduced, for introduction of small change would mean lower wages and lower prices. Ordinary shovelers get four or five dollars a day now, and other labor is paid in proportion. They do not want to receive lower wages.

"Of course, it is true they make money on the side; almost every worker does. There is a tendency in mining to follow the rule that nuggets belong to the man who uncovers them, even if they are found on the claim of the employer. I have seen men pick up nuggets worth $108.

Liver Trouble Remedy Free

Any intelligent person can be his own doctor in the ordinary case of liver trouble, for the symptoms cannot be mistaken. If the white of the eye becomes yellowish, if the skin becomes sallow, it pimples and blotches appear, if the bowels do not move, if you have sick headache, if you are bilious, you may be sure that your liver is torpid or inactive.

The quickest and surest remedy yet found for the cure of liver trouble or any of its symptoms is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the great herb laxative compound. This wonderful remedy is not only a laxative, but a tonic as well. It will start the flow of gastric juice, thereby soon enabling the liver to do its work naturally. A bottle of this great liver remedy can be bought of any druggist for 50 cents or $1, and in many cases a single bottle has cured a chronic case.

For example, John W. Lee, 619 S. Pennsylvania ave., Indianapolis, Ind., had a stubborn and very long-standing case of liver trouble, with pimples, blotches, jaundice, etc., and it cured him. Mrs. B. Pinchum, Jackson, Ky., says the same of it. Thousands of families keep it in the house against just such an emergency, as you can never tell when some member of the family will need a good laxative.

In order to have you or any other sufferer from the liver make a test of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin without personal expense, Dr. Caldwell will send you a free test bottle if you will send your name and address. The sample will show you how pleasant it is to take, how quickly it works. It will start you on the cure of your trouble and convince you that you have found a cure. That is the object of the sample, and the doctor urges you to send for it today.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. Address Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 459 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

The Man for the Farm.

The ideal hired man on the farm is one who farms because he is in love with the work, and who studies the best methods of agriculture, both by observation and books and papers, and who prefers the cleanly, orderly and healthy occupation of farm life to the squalid and disturbing influences of the city.

The hired man who receives from $30 to $40 per month and his board the year around, is better off financially and more often becomes independent than many city workmen whose wages are three times as much.

THE POWER OF FAITH

Sunday School Lesson for April 9, 1916
Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 9:18-34. Memory verses, 22, 23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"All things are possible to him that believeth."—Mark 9:23.

TIME.—Autumn of A. D. 28.

PLACE.—On the shores of Capernaum, at Jairus' house and on the streets of the city.

Suggestion and Practical Thoughts.

What Faith Is.—Vs. 18, 19. Where was Jesus when he worked the miracles we are to study? In "his own city," Capernaum. He was fresh from two stupendous miracles, the stilling of the tempest on the sea of Galilee, and the healing of the Gadarene demoniacs across the sea from Capernaum.

How did Jairus bring his petition to Jesus? He put his whole soul into his prayer—the only kind of prayer that gets results. He worshiped him, falling at his feet, and beseeching him much (Mark). He was pleading for his only child, who was "at the point of death." Indeed, when the ruler left the house she was so near death that he did not know whether to speak of her as dead or alive, but in his distraction now called her "dying" and now, as in Matthew, "even now dead."

The girl being in that desperate condition, how did Jairus show his faith? By urging that Jesus "lay" his "hand upon her and she" should "live."

Faith for One's Self.—Vs. 20-22. How did Jesus respond to Jairus' petition? He arose at once, and followed him, and so did his disciples, and a great multitude. But how were they interrupted on the way? By another appeal, no les urgent because it was silent.

What was the trouble with this new petitioner? She had suffered for 12 years with a bloody flux.

How did she approach Jesus? She "came behind him," touched the blue and white tassels that hung from the four corners of his cloak.

What was the result? She was cured at once, and knew that she was cured.

Faith for Another.—Vs. 23-26. What test of Jairus' faith came as they approached his house? Some one ran to meet him telling him (Mark and Luke) that his daughter was dead. How did Christ strengthen the ruler's faith? By bidding him "Fear not; only believe, and she shall be made whole." What was the process of the miracle? Very simple, as in the case of all Christ's wonderful works. He merely took her by the hand, softly said, "Talitha cumi," and the maid arose.

Comrades in Faith.—Vs. 27-31. When was the next appeal made to Jesus? When he "departed thence," from the house of Jairus or from Capernaum. Who made it? "Two blind men," whose like may be found in any eastern crowd to this day.

How did they make their appeal? Not in a quiet, reverential way like Jairus, nor with awed shrinking like the woman with an issue of blood, but they followed him persistently, crying with importunity like Bartimaeus, Thou son of David, have mercy on us. We are not restricted to one form of appeal in approaching our Lord, but his ears are open to every cry.

What was implied by this mode of address? "Son of David" was a well-known popular title of the Messiah. But, though Jesus often called himself "Son of man," and especially commended those that called him Christ or Messiah, "he did not himself use the title 'Son of David,' as it implied a deliverer of Israel from a foreign yoke and a ruler in Jerusalem; and he seems not to have desired its use by others."—Principal Garvie. See Inductive Study.

Why did Christ, before healing them, ask about their faith in him? Because he wanted to show them the heart of the matter—not his power.

Despisers of Faith.—Vs. 32-34. What was the last case in this series of healing miracles? A dumb man.

How did the spectators receive this miracle? With entire amazement. The cure of the dumb and deaf—deafness being usually associated with dumbness—was considered the most difficult of all cures.

Why was faith a necessity before Christ could work his miracles? Because influence of all kinds cannot flow except along appropriate channels. We would think a man a fool if he wanted electricity but refused to stretch a wire for it; or if he wanted to conduct water from a river to his field and scorned to dig a ditch for it. In the same way, if a man wants knowledge, he knows that it will flow into his life only along the channel of a clear and industrious brain. We must have faith in a man before we can enter into the joys of friendship; suspicious questioning would at once cut us off from him.

The divine injunction is, "Be ye ready," not "Get ye ready." The Christian is to spend this life in living nobly, not in getting ready to die.

To persuade one soul to lead a better life is to leave the world better than you found it.

The Incomparable Book.

For the mass of mankind the favorite books must be those that express the common aspirations, the common consolations, and the common language. It is this, for example, that has made the Bible, for so many centuries and so many millions of men and women, ignorant and lettered, in health and sickness, joy and sorrow, the incomparable book.—The Nation.

The fact that our interests gradually take a wider scope allows more scope for the healing power of compensation.—Dinah Mulock Craik.

FINE FARM CHICKEN

Wyandottes Are of Medium Size, Hardy and Good Layers.

For Farmer Who Keeps Limited Number of Fowls They Are Excellent All-Purpose Breed—Make Excellent Broilers.

(By E. R. LARA.)

What is desired in the way of ultimate results must be considered when determining the breed of poultry one should raise. For eggs alone the leghorns are by many regarded the best. It is not so good an all-purpose fowl, however, and for those breeding for meat as well as eggs, other strains are to be preferred.

For the farmer having not more than 100 or 200 chickens, the White Wyandotte, White or Barred Plymouth Rocks, or Rhode Island Reds cannot be excelled.

The White Wyandottes are of medium size, hardy and good layers. They are easily cared for and bear confinement well, although any fowl must have plenty of exercise.

For table use they are excellent, their flesh being sweet, juicy and tender, making fine broilers and roasters. They are extremely popular because of the absence of dark pin feathers.

As layers they average well up, both for summer and winter production, if some pains be taken to provide them with comfortable quarters during inclement weather.

To do this a fairly comfortable poultry house is necessary. This means one which is dry all the time and so arranged as to admit plenty of fresh air and sunlight.

A house built with three sides tight and left largely open on the south side accomplishes this. A curtain, to be drawn tight over the opening in rigorous weather, will add materially to the comfort of the poultry. This does not exclude the fresh air, but protects against the cold.

This building can be conveniently arranged without the cost becoming very great, and it should be borne in mind that convenience pays well.

Have all the interior fixtures of the poultry house—roosts, posts, nest boxes, dropping boards, etc., easily removable, so that every part within can be reached and cleaned.

Twice yearly the house should be thoroughly fumigated and then whitewashed inside and out. For this purpose a whitewash containing a small per cent. of carbolic acid should be used.

All fowls are annoyed and suffer from insect parasites. This means a loss to the raiser and effective means must be employed to combat these pests as the birds can not do this unassisted. Provisions for a dust bath, any time, any day that the fowls desire, will help, but in addition to this the house and fixtures should be sprayed at frequent intervals with coal oil or a two per cent. solution of crude carbolic acid. This spraying should be done early in the day so that the fumes will have nearly all evaporated before the fowls go to roost.

During the summer the wide range afforded by the farm solves the problem as to proper feeding. But in winter when the fowls do not have insect diet, meat food in some form is necessary. Table scraps and ground bone supply this very well. Lime, in the form of shells and old plaster, also is necessary, and great care should be exercised that an abundance of fresh water is supplied. A pan filled with solid ice will not suffice for drinking water.

At the present prices of eggs and poultry, chickens are too valuable to be neglected. It is safe to say that in return for their care and expense they are the greatest profit earners on the farm.

Japanese Clover.

Japanese clover, Lespedeza striata, is an annual, and grows from 18 to 24 inches high in good soil, forming a dense mat of stems and foliage. It grows fairly well in poor piny land and other dry soils, and is useful in the south for pasture in the fall, and to some extent for hay. It has become extensively naturalized in many states south of the Ohio river. For hay it should be sown in the spring at the rate of at least 30 pounds to the acre.

The American Hen.

The American hen produces more wealth in a year by six times than the gold or iron mines of the United States and she doesn't get much credit for it.

The Crush.

It was at an afternoon tea, with the usual musical accompaniment. The man's man had been literally dragged there, an unwilling victim, by a zealous friend who liked afternoon teas with a musical accompaniment. Needless to say, the zealous friend was a ladies' man.

The man's man was very unhappy. He had sulked and had positively refused to be introduced to the bevy of charming girls presiding at the tea tables, much to the chagrin of the ladies' man, who naturally couldn't understand the attitude of the man's man. It was inexorable, from his point of view. But a ray of hope glimmered in his breast when the man's man rushed up to him, exclaiming:

"I say, old fellow, introduce me to the fat lady sitting over in the corner, will you?"

The eyes of the ladies' man glistened.

"With the greatest of pleasure," he cried. "Have you got a crush on her?"

"No," replied the man's man savagely. "I should say it was quite the other way. She's sitting on my hat!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Word "Canvassing."

How "canvassing" got its election significance is one of the unsolved puzzles of etymology. The word appears originally to have meant tossing in a canvas or blanket and thence generally mishandling or assaulting. "I'll canvass thee in thy broad cardinal's hat," is the Duke of Gloucester's threat to the bishop of Winchester in "King Henry VI." The next stage of meaning was that of destructive criticism, from which to thorough discussion—"canvassing" a subject—was simple enough. But how exactly did it arrive at the election sense? Dr. Johnson explained that the term meant "trying votes previously to the decision" and derived it from "canvas, as it signifies a sieve." The Oxford Dictionary, however, is unable to find this use of the word.

Jerusalem.

Old Uncle Jasper was buying a postcard in a New Orleans postoffice when a gentleman approaching the next window had a small parcel weighed and stamped for Jerusalem. On this gentleman's departure Uncle Jasper chuckled and said:

"He was jokin', wasn't he?"

"Not at all," returned the clerk.

"My, oh, my!" cried Uncle Jasper in an awed tone. "Is it possible yo take letters to Jerusalem? I thought it was above!"

ALABAMA STATE FAIR.

Birmingham, October 6-15, 1910, To Be the Biggest and Best Yet. Magnificent Agricultural Premiums.

The Alabama State Fair is getting out its preliminary premium list in order to give the farmers ample time to plant and prepare to compete for the splendid premiums they will offer in all lines of agriculture this year. Jefferson county will not be allowed to compete with the other counties of the State for the county exhibit premium. Special premiums have been provided for the best agricultural exhibits from Jefferson county. This is deemed fair in order that the other counties will not have to compete against Jefferson for the county prizes.

The prizes for corn and fruit displays are larger than ever offered by any Fair in the South, and are practically quadruple what they were last year.

The management is arranging for amusement features on even a greater scale than last year. The most nerve-thrilling acts, the finest music, the most magnificent fire works and splendid racing will be provided, and everything done to make the Fair this year the most successful ever held. When it is remembered that Birmingham had the best State Fair last year of any place in the South, one can imagine on what a grand scale the Fair will be conducted this year. Some of the agricultural premiums offered are as follows:

County Exhibits.

(Jefferson county not included.)

First premium, $800; second premium, $500; third premium, $300; fourth premium, $150; fifth premium, $100.

Special Jefferson County Premiums.

2. For the second best Jefferson County Exhibit as above, $300.

Corn Exhibit.

First premium, for largest and best display, $100. Second premium, $75. Third premium, $40.

Corn Club Exhibits.

For the best collective corn exhibit by a regular corn club. First premium, $100; second premium, $50; third premium, $25.

Cotton Exhibit.

Best, largest and most attractive exhibit, in bolls, on stalk and in lint. First premium, $50; second premium, $25.

Hay, Grass, Forage Plants.

For largest and best assortment, $50; second, $25.

Small Grain Exhibit.

For largest, best and most attractive exhibit in sheaf and grain, $25; second, $15.

Vegetable Exhibit.

For largest, best and greatest variety of vegetables of every description, $50; second, $25.

Fruit Growers' Prizes.

The prizes for fruits have been decidedly increased and should attract fine exhibits. For largest and best display, $150; second, $100; third, $50.

Special prizes will also be offered for best collection of each of the following: Cow peas, sweet potatoes, turnips, peanuts, pumpkins, alfalfa, clover, hay, sorghum, sugar cane, tobacco, etc., the prizes ranging from $15 to $25 for first, and from $5 to $.50 for second.

Undisturbed Femininity.

"Women may be catty in little things, yet they have a childlike trust in each other's honesty," said the man. "If they hadn't they could never have sat serenely through the situation that faced several of them the other night at the opera. I had a balcony seat. Beside me sat a woman who discovered, at the end of the first act, that she had lost her purse. She thought it had slipped to the seat in front. The woman occupying that seat stood up, shook her wraps and looked under the seat, but couldn't find the purse.

"'Still, it may be here some place,' she said. 'My own bag has slipped down to the seat in front of me. I'll get it when the opera is over.'

"Then other women began to hunt for handbags and purses that had fallen. Some found them, others didn't. But nobody seemed to mind. They had a perfect faith that the things would turn up later and settled back tranquilly for the second act. Imagine a lot of men letting their purses lie around like that."

Capt. Begadus again hits the Bull's Eye.

This world famous rifle shot who holds the championship record of 100 pigeons in 100 consecutive shots is living at Lincoln, Ill. Recently interviewed, he says:—"I have suffered a long time with kidney and bladder trouble and have used several well known kidney medicines all of which gave me no relief until I started taking Foley's Kidney Pills. Before I used Foley's Kidney Pills I was subjected to severe backache and pains in my kidneys with suppression and often times a cloudy voiding. While upon arising in the morning I would get dull headache. Now I have taken three bottles of Foley's Kidney Pills and feel 100 per cent better. I am never bothered with my kidneys or bladder and once more feel like my own self. All this I owe solely to Foley's Kidney Pills and always recommend them to my fellow sufferers." Upchurch Drug Co.

IN CHILDHOOD'S BRIEF HOUR

Children's Sweet Illusions Should Not Be Shattered Prematurely by Their Elders.

If your mother had let the housework go and taken you on her lap and explained away all the pleasures of the Mother Goose book of rhymes, would you have grown up to be any better man or woman? asks the Wichita (Kans.) Beacon. What if she had explained that the cow never jumped over the moon; that there was no Little Miss Muffet, and if there had been there was no tuffet for her to sit on; that Jack didn't violate etiquette by sticking his thumb into a plum pie; that Jack and Gill's parents used hydrant water and they never went up a hill to get the drinking pail filled; that Jack Sprat could eat any kind of meat set before him instead of only lean meat; that Old King Cole was a grouchy dyspeptic and the very opposite of a merry old soul; that no blackbird ever disfigured the king's washerwoman by picking off her nose?

Would you have been a better boy or girl if your mother had done all these things—has explained away the delightful book of childhood and had told you that the amusing, jingling rhymes were written by some hard-up story-writer who wrote them for money and not for truth's sake? Would you?

Is anything accomplished by squaring a child around and setting it face to face with the realities of life before it has come into the years of responsibility? Let the children enjoy in a childish way, for it is brief and comes not again.

POSITION LONG IN FAMILY

Members Have Been Organist in English Church for More Than a Century.

A remarkable record has been commemorated at Teignmouth, England, by the presentation to Miss Linter, organist of the parish church of St. Michael, East Teignmouth, of an illuminated address and a purse of 130 sovereigns, subscribed by parishioners and others. The post of organist in the church has remained uninterruptedly in the Linter family since the year 1809, when Miss Linter's father, William Linter, became organist of the church.

The pet dog show at the Royal Horticultural hall, in London, drew a great crowd, chiefly of women, and the old familiar scenes of luxury were witnessed in every avenue of the nearly 1,000 pens. But all records in this direction were surpassed by the miniature iron bedstead, with mattress, sheets, blanket, quilt, hangings and all complete, in which a four-months-old Pekinese spaniel reposed. The smallest dog in the show was Messrs. Willson's miniature black-and-tan terrier. It weighed only two pounds two ounces, and was brought to the exhibition in a man's coat pocket. The lightest dog, however, was a Yorkshire terrier of one pound 14 ounces, with a delightfully groomed coat of silken fleece.

Uses Animals Make of Their Tails.

Horses, cows and other creatures use their tails as fly flappers, says a writer in Dumb Animals. Cats, squirrels and many more twist them around their necks for comforters. The rat has raised the use of the tail to a fine art, for by its means it guides the blind and steals jelly, oil and cream out of jars and bottles.

The macaco plays as merrily with its tail as a kitten does, and the marmoset while it sleeps uses its tail as a sort of blanket.

The raccoon catches crabs with its tail. Every one knows how the monkeys journey through pathless forests by swinging from tree to tree, while the fishes steer their way through the water by their tail fins.

The ant eater puts up its big bushy tail for an umbrella. The vanity of the peacock is fed by the beauty of its tail.

Corn Silage.

Corn silage is about the cheapest and most efficient to supplement the winter rations for dairy and beef cattle, horses, calves and sheep. It is cheaper to handle the corn crop in the form of silage than any other way. And should there be another summer of little rain the well-stocked silo furnishes succulent green food and comes as a great relief to the husbandman.

REFUSE TO BE DISCOURAGED

Japanese, Taken Either as a Race or as Individuals, Are Ever Optimistic.

The Japs are the most optimistic people on the face of the earth. Kick a coolie and he will get up smiling; tax him and he will wonder why he wasn't levied upon long before; give him a disaster and he will say it might have been worse. He knows no discouragement. Few races in history have been so heavily taxed as have the Japanese to overcome the cost of the last war. They look upon their huge debt lightly, and when the government told them they would have to pay it they laughed cheerfully—and went at it. Commercial activities were doubled, even trebled. A smart legislative body put exceedingly heavy taxes on cigars and tobaccos, luxuries all Japanese forego. In doing this the white foreigner was made to help out the struggling masses. Horses are as rare in Japan as buffalo are in this country to-day. One may walk a dozen blocks down the principal street of any Japanese metropolis without seeing a single horse. The owners of what few there are pay dearly for the privilege of keeping them. The friend of man in most other countries, here the horse is judged man's worst enemy. If the country were overrun with horses thousands of rickshaw coolies would be out of a job. Now a condition in which people are out of jobs is not good for any country, and particularly is it bad for war debts, as it lets them run on indefinitely drawing princely interest.—Bookkeeper.

THE WOMAN AND THE DOG

Simple Explanation That Made Crowd of Frightened Men Look Rather Foolish.

A crowd gathered at Tenth and Barton streets to watch a handsome fox terrier that was running about, nose in air. White froth was running from the dog's mouth.

"He's mad!" yelled a fat man.

The fox terrier stood in the center of the group, with wide-open eyes, either too mad or too frightened to move.

At this juncture, the policeman arrived. A dozen voices began to tell him that the dog was mad; that it must be killed; that it had been snapping at the children; that it began to froth when it passed a pool of water, and how best to shoot.

A tall, quiet-looking woman pushed through the crowd and started toward the dog. A dozen men yelled at her, two or three men grabbed at her.

She picked the dog up and started out of the crowd. The policeman stopped her with:

"Madam, that dog is mad. He must be shot. Look at the foam coiling out of his mouth."

"Foam," she said contemptuously. "That's a cream puff he was eating."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

No Beggars in Copenhagen.

Copenhagen is a city of 500,000 inhabitants. During a week's stay I have seen no seller of matches or bootlaces, no gutter merchant, no blind or other afflicted persons about the streets asking for alms—not one single sign of distress due to poverty. I have explored the artisans' quarters by day and late at night. There is not a single spot in the whole of Copenhagen that could be compared even remotely to the slums in our large towns. There are no unemployed hanging about the street corners, no unkempt women standing idly at the doors, no ragged and dirty houses, with dirty or broken windows, mended with bits of paper, and a ragged apron or a torn bedcloth doing duty for a curtain.—Denmark letter in London Express.

Colorizing Society.

A friend from Denmark who declares he knows tells me that the late king and queen of Denmark put down their undoubted and even extraordinary youthfulness of appearance and character to the fact that they never had anybody about their court who was over 40 years of age. Any gentleman or lady over that age was superannuated.—The Gentlewoman.

So Careless.

Child—Mamma, mamma, my piece of bread and butter has dropped on the buttered side!

Mamma (to nurse)—Mary, I must beg that you will be more careful to butter Rhoda's bread on the right side.

Doctor of Optometry

IN LOVING REMEMBRANCE of Katie Walker, died Tuesday evening, March 22, aged 23 yrs.

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home,
Which never can be filled.
God in His wisdom has recalled
The boon He gave but given;
And though the lady sleeps here,
The soul is safe in heaven.

Then art gone but not forgotten,
Dearest Mother's by heart.
We shall meet beyond the river,
Where our souls shall never part;
We shall know the joys of heaven,
We shall share its bliss sublime,
In that land of joy and sunshine,
In that happy, blissful clime.

'Tis hard to break the tender cord
When love has bound the heart,
'Tis hard, so hard to speak the words
"We must forever part."
Dearest loved one we must lay thee
In the peaceful grave's embrace,
But thy memory we will cherish
'Til we see thy heavenly face.

We miss thee from our home, dear Katie,
We miss thee from thy place,
A shadow o'er our life is cast,
We miss the sunshine of thy face;
We miss thy kind and willing hand,
Thy fond and earnest care,
Our home is dark without thee;
We miss thee everywhere.

In Perfect Accord.

Some years ago there came to an American city a delightful German, Herr von Blitz, who intended to support himself by giving lessons in his native tongue. When he had been here several months and had secured a moderate number of pupils he went one day to the mother of one of them and to her great surprise asked for her daughter's hand in marriage.

"But, my dear sir," said she, "my daughter has no fortune."

The suitor smiled upon her in an expansive generosity.

"Me, too," said he reassuringly.

"And, although we are not rich, we have thus far been able to give her every comfort. She is indeed used to luxury."

"Me, too," was the smiling rejoinder.

"But, Herr von Blitz, she will never be able to manage affairs."

"Me, too," rejoiced the lover.

"And I feel obliged to tell you that my daughter has a very high temper."

"Me too—me too."

That was enough. The mother retired from the contest, and the professor won his suit.

Acute Heart Trouble.

"Yes, I remember him," said Alkali Ike. "He died very sudden."

"Heart disease?" asked the eastern tourist.

"Waal, now, I don't know as you kin say it was the heart any more'n the club, spade or diamond. Anyway, he dealt himself four aces."—Philadelphia Press.

Pain in Heart

"For two years I had pain in my heart, back and left side. Could not draw a deep breath or lie on left side, and any exertion would cause palpitation. THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Sees, and Some He Sees Not.

Thankful we all were to see the fine rain on Tuesday, a rain which was badly needed by the farmers as well as the dust driven citizens of the towns. Gardens look much better for it, and in fact the whole earth is benefitted and grateful for it, and we can get along without our sprinkler for another day or two.

Early risers, it is said, may see the comet a little before sunrise. I have not seen it and guess I'll wait for the evening performance a little later. Comets are wonderful things, and it may be another seventy-five years before the next one is visible, but I dont think I can get up before sunrise to look for Mr. Halley's comet.

A touch of last month is throwing itself in April, blustering windy days which properly belong in March are now the rule. But let it blow! Anyhow spring is here, the trees are budding, gardens are flourishing, all nature is in a gay mood, so why not you and I?

Talking of diversified farming, some fine asparagus, raised at Thorsby, is now on the Clanton market. It is a splendid vegatable, and is grown to perfection in Thorsby.

Clanton now has a first class photo. Gallery. Mr. Scott has put in a skylight and fitted up a studio in the Reynolds building. Mr. Scott operated a studio in Birmingham for twelve years.

Mr. R. H. Long of the Leal Coal Company of Fountain Creek was in town Saturday. He gives a good report of the ore mining in the neighborhood and says the ore is of fine quality and of unlimited amount. They are finding employment for all the teams and all the men that apply.

PAINT YOUR MAIL BOXES

The Postmaster, Clanton, Ala.,

It is the desire of the Department that you earnestly request patrons of rural delivery out of your office to paint their boxes and the post to which they are attached a pure white color. This course, if pursued, will not only result in benefit to the patron in serving to protect his box and post from damage by the weather, but will give all boxes a uniform color and serve to fix their identity in all parts of the country as United States mail boxes, and will give them a much neater and sightlier appearance than they now possess. It is also desired that patrons be induced to imprint their names and box numbers on boxes in black block letters about two inches high.

It is also desired that you endeavor to induce road officials to paint upon the posts of boxes which are located at crossroads (but not attach signs thereto) the names of the towns or villages to which the crossroads lead with an indicator showing the direction.

Posts to which boxes should be attached shall be set in an easily accessible position at the side of the road and boxes securely fastened to a projecting arm of wood, as shown in cut; or to a bracket of band iron about three-sixteenths of an inch thick, or, if preferred, an automatic extension arm may be used.

If you can do so without expense, bring these matters to the attention of the public through your local paper, or otherwise in the most desirable manner.

Respectfuliy,
P. V. DEGRAW,
Fourth Ast. Postmaster Gen.

Stanton.

Editor Banner:— Please allow me small space in your paper to say a few words. The health of this community is very good at present.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely.

Rev. Bradley filled his regular appointment Sunday; there was a very nice congregation there.

Let us all come out next fourth Sunday evening to preaching at 3 o'clock.

Mr. Bob Williams of Clanton ford made a flying visit to Stanton Sunday.

Mr. Walter DuBose was in Stanton Sunday.

Misses Lula and Willis Belle Jeffcoat and Misses Eva and Bertha Groom visited friends at Mulberry last Saturday and Sunday and report a nice time.

Mrs. Butts of North Stanton visited Mrs. Blair Sunday.

Mrs. Jeffcoat and family visited her daughter, Mrs. Chas. Yaw at Stanton Sunday.

The death angel visited Mr. and Mrs. Carel Walker and took away their loving daughter, Miss Kate. She was only sick a short while. Weep not, dear father and mother, God giveth and taketh away; He knows best.

The singing last Friday night at Mr. G. G. Lester's was enjoyed by all present. Well, I will ring off, for this time and will come again if this misses the waste basket.

MAMA'S DARLING.

To the voters of Chilton County:

The Democratic primary is so near that it will be impossible for me to make a thorough canvass of the county, but I hope the people will turn out and vote in the primary, and express their choice for the man they wish to have as their next Sheriff. Having served on the Board of Registrors for several years I feel that most of our people know me, and I ask them for their votes and pledge them that if nominated and elected I shall discharge the duties of the office alike to all the people. This is my only promise.

Yours truly,
B. L. JONES.

Miss O. Haigler and her sister, Ella, are visiting their brother John Haigler, of Stanton.

Mr. Eff Sewell of Stanton has moved to the Dallas Lumber Company's mill at Needmore. For fear of the waste basket we close with best wishes to the Banner.

PEACE IS TO REIGN

Trouble in Coal Fields Soon To Be Adjusted.

SO SAY THE OFFICIALS.

President of the Miners' Union Says That Suspension Will Be Only Temporary—Steps for Settlement Are Now Being Taken.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Advices from the bituminous coal fields of the United States received by Thomas L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, when he returned to the headquarters of the organization in this city, satisfied him, he said, that the suspension of work in the mines pending the signing of a new wage contract between miners and operators would not be long continued.

"I have not been 'talking strike' in Illinois," said Mr. Lewis, "and I am not going to do anything of the sort in western and central Pennsylvania next week. Operators and miners in those three districts, in Indiana, Iowa, Ohio, western Kentucky and the southwest will all be discussing means of settlement of the questions between themselves next week. The matter will have to work itself out, and it will work out to the end that we will get the demanded wage increase of 5.55 per cent whether on work by the day or ton.

"In Illinois, the southwest, and western Pennsylvania the conferences will take longer in reaching conclusions than in the other states, but I cannot believe there will be a final break.

"If the operators of Pennsylvania and Ohio feared that the operators in the non-union districts of West Virginia and that neighborhood would undersell them, that objection to increasing the wages of union miners has been swept away by the news that in practically all the non-union fields in West Virginia, Maryland and southern Pennsylvania the operators have come out with a raise of the wages of their unorganized workmen. This is also a plain object lesson that the union man benefits the non-union man."

Mr. Lewis will spend tomorrow at his home at Bridgeport, Ohio, and on Monday will go to DuBois, Pa., or to Pittsburg.

HALLEY'S COMET.

Celestial Visitor Will Be Visible to Naked Eye During May.

Lake Geneva, Wis.—Within a few days the great Yerkes telescope at the Williams Bay observatory of the University of Chicago will pick out from space Halley's comet, for whose appearance all the astronomers of the West are watching. At present the comet is hidden by the brilliancy of the sun, around which it is just completing its parabolic orbit, but the comet has now passed the sun and will soon be within reach of the great telescope.

The comet is likely to be sufficiently clear to be seen by the naked eye within three weeks, and from that time until May 19, when it attains its greatest brilliancy, it will become plainer nightly.

POSTAL DEFICIT IS SMALLER.

Neat Surplus For Last Quarter of 1909.

Washington.—The post office department made a surplus of $2,111,366.69 for the quarter covering the months of October, November and December, 1909, as shown by the report of the auditor for the post office department today. This was the largest quarter's business in the history of the post office department. Indications are that postal deficit for this fiscal year, instead of being $17,000,000, as was the case last year, will fall below $10,000,000.

REMARKABLE JOURNEY.

Native of Manchester, England, Will Break Record For Walking.

Valdez, Alaska.—James Fish, aged 70, and a native of Manchester, England, has started on a trip to his birthplace, with the intention of covering on foot all the land portions of his journey.

He will go by boat to Santa Cruz, Cal., where he will start his long walk across the country, finishing at Boston. He has been a resident of Valdez ten years, during which time he has never been out of Alaska.

Kentucky Mines Closed.

Louisville, Ky.—The mines in district 23, western Kentucky, have suspended operations, and will remain closed, as far as the workmen are concerned, until an agreement is reached between the operators and miners.

A Narrow Escape.

Macon, Ga.—Roland, the eleven-year-old son of Charles R. Reid, came near losing his life in a sewer at the intersection of Third and Hawthorne streets yesterday afternoon when he attempted to pass from one exit to the other through the block. He had gone the entire distance and was at the point of exit when he became fastened and could not escape. It was necessary for Call Officer Tom Avant, who went to the scene, to employ help and dig up the sewer pipe and break the joints. The boy was completely exhausted and unconscious when extricated.

DR. COOK'S CLAIM.

Millionaires Believe Brooklyn Man Found Pole.

New York.—Captain B. F. Osborn of the Arctic club, announced today that he had received letters from millionaires offering backing to the extent of more than $1,000,000 for Dr. Frederick Cook, the discredited explorer, to establish proofs of his claim that he and not Commander Peary discovered the north pole.

Captain Osborn said that Dr. Cook had received enormous offers to take the lecture platform and that he would take up both matters when the explorer reaches New York. Dr. Cook is expected here within three weeks.

"The report that Dr. Cook would be here today and would establish himself at a big hotel is nonsense," said Capt. Osborn. "He does not want any publicity until he has convinced the world of the wrong that it has done him.

The offer of a million dollars puts us in a position to establish the truth of his claims without a doubt. We have been negotiating with some of the best scientists in the world and several of these will be retained.

"We have learned already that on the day Peary says he reached the pole and took observations from the sun there was not enough sun to make it possible."

FATAL FOREST FIRE.

Flames Sweep Through Lumber Camps in Louisiana.

Dryprong, La.—Information reaching here from logging camps declares that a woman and seven men perished in a forest fire Wednesday while they were fighting flames which destroyed several camps and burned over a big territory.

The fire fighters, led by Mrs. Ivy, were burned to death when they attempted to save Mrs. Ivy's home from destruction. The house was surrounded by a thicket. While they were directing attention to the house, the flames swept through the thicket, and in an attempt to escape their clothing caught fire. The eight sustained fatal burns. Many more were hurt.

BIG SEAL CATCHES.

Over 200,000 Seals Have Been Taken —Value over $500,000.

St. Johns, N. F.—Indications that the present sealing season would be one of the most successful in the history of Newfoundland seal hunters were contained in a wireless dispatch received at the Cape Race station from the sealing steamer Florizel. The dispatch stated that the vessel's catch included 45,000 seals, valued at $100,000, a record catch for one ship. Other ships with the Florizel have catches of from 10,000 to 40,000 aboard and they are the largest seals taken for several years, the message stated.

Eight vessels out of a fleet of 20 have to date reported catches totalling 201,000 seals, the value of which amounts to over $508,000.

UNIVERSITY SELECTS REESE

To Deliver Commencement Sermon for Class of 1910.

Athens, Ga.—Bishop F. F. Reese, of the Georgia diocese of the Episcopal church, has been selected by the University of Georgia authorities to preach the commencement sermon at the chapel on Sunday, June 12.

Bishop Reese formerly lived in Georgia and was made head of the Georgia diocese a few years ago when the state was divided into two dioceses.

Sheriff's Officers Restrain Negro Mob.

Charleston, S. C.—Seven negroes, two of them women, suspected of being implicated in the recent incipient riot on James Island, opposite Charleston, on the Ashley river, have been committed to jail under bond of $500 each to stand trial in the June term of court for conspiracy and inciting riot. Four of the negroes under arrest were dismissed. A mob of negroes gathered at the preliminary hearing, but were kept under restraint by the sheriff and a strong posse.

Musician Drops Dead.

Evansville, Ind.—Jason Debar, a 64-year-old tuba player, rose from a sick bed, despite protests, to play in a band, which the Musicians' union had organized in honor of the funeral of a fellow-musician, who had been Debar's life-long friend. Debar insisted upon playing, "If I fall in my tracks." He marched two blocks and while stoutly blowing into his tuba, dropped dead in front of the hearse.

One Killed, Several Hurt.

Huntington, W. Va.—A passenger train running from Roanoke to Portsmouth left the track near Watts Station, 40 miles south of Kenova, last night and several cars rolled down an embankment. John Griffith, of Portsmouth, Ohio, was instantly killed and a dozen passengers are reported to have been seriously injured.

Farmer Shot to Death.

Lexington, Ky.—Word has reached here that while plowing in his corn field Monroe Vance, a farmer, of Floyd county, was assassinated by persons who fired from ambush, killing him instantly. The assassins escaped.

Section Hands on Strike.

Bowling Green, Ohio.—Over 2,000 section men on the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton line struck when their demand for a wage increase was refused.

HARMON AND FOSS

Two Democrats Who May Head Party Ticket in 1912.

REPRESENT EAST AND WEST

Foss Has Been Recently Elected to Congress From Massachusetts and Is Said to Be Very Wealthy.—Harmon Is a Strong Ohio Democrat.

Washington.—The election of Eugene N. Foss, of Massachusetts, to the house of representatives in the old Lovering district, has called attention to the availability of Foss as the Democratic candidate for vice-president in 1912. Already this is being discussed about the capitol. If Foss comes to Washington and makes good" it is likely a good deal more will be heard of it.

JUDSON HARMON.

Many reasons are given by admirers of Foss why he is the proper man for the Democrats to nominate for vice-president. In the first place, he has what is generally supposed to be the indispensable requisite of a candidate for vice-president, a "barl" of money. Foss is reputed to be worth at least $10,000,000. He will be one of the wealthiest men in congress.

It is generally supposed now that Governor Judson Harmon, of Ohio, will be nominated for the presidency by the Democrats. In that case, say the folks who think on Foss for the nomination for vice-president, Foss would be available for geographical reasons as well as others. He is an Eastern man and would satisfy the demand of Eastern Democrats to have their part of the country represented on the ticket. At the same time he is well known in the West through his activity for reciprocity and for lower tariff and he would satisfy Westerners who are for downward revision and reciprocity.

It is not unlikely that he will head the Democratic ticket for governor in Massachusetts next fall, despite the fact he has been elected to congress.

Vendetta Murder.

New York.—A vendetta murder occurred here, when John Lewis, "Handsome Tony," or "Tough Tony," a well-to-do East Side young Italian, was shot to death by his feud enemies, firing from a speeding automobile. He fell as he tried to draw his own revolver. It is believed by the police that a feud, starting over a woman, caused the tragedy. The murderers, three in number, escaped in the automobile.

Donaghey Re-Nominated.

Little Rock, Ark.—Un-official returns from the democratic primary election indicate the re-nomination of Governor George W. Donaghey over Judge C. C. Kavanaugh by a large majority. Because of the difficulty in securing the returns from the more remote country districts it will probably be several days before the official result can be announced.

The democratic nomination in Arkansas is equivalent to election.

Many Victims of Strike.

Philadelphia.—Leaders of the carmen's strike call attention to a list of fatalities since the beginning of the walkout six weeks ago. Eleven persons have been killed by street cars and collisions have been frequent, causing injuries to passengers. A movement is under way, the strike leaders say, to bring pressure to demand that the transit company send out only reliable operatives on cars.

Lynching Is Prevented.

Quanah, Texas.—Only the quick action of the sheriff at Fort Worth prevented a lynching. Dwyer, a white man, is accused of attacking the 5-year-old daughter of Milton Winbury on a ranch 17 miles from here. A mob formed to lynch him, but dispersed when it became known he had been hurried away.

Killed Resisting Arrest.

Shreveport, La.—Daniel Johnson, a negro wanted for the assassination of two white peddlers, George Lafitte and George Petro, was fatally shot at Mansfield, La., while resisting arrest.

Bishop Barry Dead.

London.—Bishop Barry, formerly chaplain to Queen Victoria and primate of Australia, died at Windsor. He was 84 years old.

WRECK FROM GALE

Austria Visited by Drestructive Tornadoes.

VERY HEAVY SHIPPING LOSS

Not Only Will the Property Loss Amount to Hundreds of Thousands of Dollars, but There Has Been Serious Loss of Life.

Vienna.—Leaving a trail of destruction over the more northern parts of Austria, storms and tornadoes, which have caused a property loss of millions, passed southward toward the Balkans and along the Adriatic sea. It is feared that the loss to shipping will be heavy. Trieste, where great shipping vessels were tossed about in the new harbor, narrowly escaping disaster, and smaller craft suffered worse, bore the brunt of the hurricane.

Several persons are known to have been killed in different parts of the country and reports in detail indicate that the death list will be much higher than at first supposed.

In Vienna traffic is still tied up, the streets are covered with snow and wire communication is almost at a standstill. The telegraph and telephone systems are so crippled that few details can be secured from the remoter districts. The services in Croatia, Slavonia, Bosnia, Hersegovina and Dalmatia were crippled, and it is feared destruction has been general there. Montenegro is also affected.

ARMOUR PREDICTS RELIEF.

Packing Magnate Declares Food Products Will Get Cheaper.

New Orleans, La.—J. Ogden Armour, head of the big Chicago packing house of Armour & Co., who is visiting friends here, sees relief from the present high prices of meat. The big packing man says we are now in a high price cycle of meat, but we will return to normal conditions.

"The price of meat runs in cycles," said Mr. Armour, "and at the present time we are in a high price cycle, but this will not last. Hog products, which are about five cents too high, will go down and so will beef, which is considerably higher. The cost of feed and other unfavorable conditions have brought about the present cost of meat, but, as I have said, it is merely a cycle and it is no indication that it will continue."

Mystery in Woman's Death.

St. Louis.—The police are mystified over the finding of Mrs. Maisie Hilgerman, a wealthy widow, in her home in Webster Groves, nude and bruised to such an extent that she died within a few hours. Physicians told the police the woman's body showed a dozen or more bruises. She was found lying in a heap of broken furniture.

Big Steamer Wrecked.

Perth, West Australia.—The big British liner Percles was wrecked about six miles south of Cape Leeuwin, the southwest point of Australia. The passengers and crew took to the small boats and all were landed safely at Cape Leeuwin. Soon after being abandoned the steamer disappeared beneath the waters.

22 Dead, 200 Hurt.

Berlin.—Two hundred soldiers were injured, according to official reports, when a Rhine train crashed into a troop train near Mulheim. The death list was increased to 22 by the death of one of the injured. A signal man has been arrested.

Foot Caught in Switch.

Covington, Ga.—George Foster, a negro brakeman, on the Central railway, was run over by a freight car in the Central freight yards and killed. He was running to turn the switch when his foot caught in a frog and he fell under the car.

Albert Wolter Indicted.

New York.—It took just ninety minutes for two juries to pave the way for the trial of Albert Wolter, charged with the atrocious murder of Ruth Wheeler. A coroner's jury held him for the grand jury, and the grand jury indicted him for the murder.

Leaves 84 Descendants.

Paducah, Ky.—Chris S. Houser, who died here at the age of 93, leaves eighty-four descendants, among them one great-great-grandchild. Over half of the number were at his bedside when the end came. Sheriff George Houser is one of the family.

Object to the Lee Statue.

Washington.—Protests by forty G. A. R. posts against the acceptance by congress of the statue of Robert E. Lee for a place in the Statuary hall were presented to the senate by Senator Lodge of Massachusetts.

Goulds Buy Express Stock.

New York.—The Union Pacific, it was learned here, has sold to the Gould interests $2,400,000 stock of the Pacific Express company, which the railroad had held in its treasury for years.

Fell 900 Feet.

Berlin.—As a cheering crowd watched its evolutions, a biplane suddenly whirled and fell 900 feet to the ground. Both the aviator and a passenger he was carrying escaped death, but were seriously hurt.

SUNRISE IS NOT SEEN

High Buildings Block Range of Vision at South Kensington.

Not More Than 50 Per Cent. of Sky Ever Visible at Observatory—Scientist Urges Removal to Less Obscured Spot.

London.—An observatory for the study of solar phenomena, whence the sun can seldom be seen and a sunset or sunrise never, appears a strange anomaly.

Such is the position of the government solar physics laboratory and observatory in South Kensington, around which since it was first constructed high buildings and trees have grown to obscure the heavens from view.

More than this. Only one-half of the sky is at any time within the range of vision, and that half is more often than not obscured by London smoke.

A scientific correspondent, who went there recently for information, pointed out more glaring anomalies in the situation of this important observatory.

"So badly placed is it," he explained, "that though the new daylight comet has twice been visible in central London to all, yet this state department, especially formed for the study of such things, has not, owing to its unfavorable position and surroundings been able even to see it.

"Anybody going there can see, moreover, that the observers are never able to see the sun rise or set, because they are surrounded by tall buildings on either side. Yet their principal work, as the word 'solar' shows, is concerned with the sun.

"Since the observatory was established, over 25 years ago, buildings and trees have grown up all round it, shutting out the horizon.

"Not more than 50 per cent. of the sky, I estimated, is visible; absolutely the whole of the horizon is blocked out, and of the sky that is left only that immediately overhead is blue, because the London smoke renders the air so hazy.

"To revert to the comet. It is still a riddle whether it is composed of sodium or of helium. This the instruments would have solved in a few minutes had it been possible to employ them, but most of the time it was visible in London it was behind the two tower-like chimneys of the Natural History museum.

"For the short time it was not so obscured the north wind swept the smoke of the town across the otherwise cloudless skies, and prevented any observations being made.

"Every one outside London saw what a magnificent object the comet was, and yet at the Solar Physics laboratory, maintained for such purposes, nothing could be seen.

"If on such evenings the comet, then fairly high up in the sky, could not be viewed, it follows that the observers cannot get any star, however important, which is low down in the sky, so that, from an observational point of view, the scientists are constantly prevented from doing necessary work.

"The Solar Physics laboratory—it is not even on the telephone, as a search in the book reveals—is housed, as any one can see, in two galvanized iron sheds, and the telescopes and other valuable instruments, photographic apparatus, etc., are actually in wooden shanties.

"One, at least, of these I noticed was covered with tarred felting on the roof, as inflammable a material as can be found.

"In the house of commons, indeed, as scientific men know only too well, the Solar Physics observatory is contemptuously referred to as the 'hen run.'

"The importance of the work done there—the pioneer observatory of solar physics—is easily demonstrable. For example, it has been discovered that sunspots, which indicate tremendous solar activity, occur in definite cycles of about 11 years, and that the world's weather is vitally concerned with them.

"How essential is the work arising from this knowledge becomes plain when the disastrous effects of drought in India, Africa and Australia are remembered.

"All this information has been gleaned from the sun and yet, at the best time to view him, the early morning, no observation can be made, and the foreign scientists, who laugh at the English government's tradesman-like stinginess, are able, in their ample state-aided up-to-date observatories, built on the plans laid down at Kensington, to do far more work.

"There is a rumor that there has long been a project on foot to move the laboratory to Fosterdown—a now disused mobilization center on the top of the Hog's Back, near Caterham.

"Nothing has been done, however, because, I suppose, it would cost a few thousand pounds, though were the observatory established there it would be twice as efficient at the very least.

"The real trouble is that science is not represented at the polls and is consequently neglected in parliament, much to England's detriment."

Wages for Farm Workmen.

Government reports show that the average prices paid farm workmen have risen from an average of $10.43 per month in 1870 to $17 in 1906. The next census is expected to show a very much larger increase.

JUSTICE BREWER.

DEATH CLAIMS BREWER.

Stroke of Apoplexy Ends Career of Distinguished Jurist.

Washington.—David Josiah Brewer, associate justice of the supreme court of the United States, is dead as the result of a stroke of apoplexy. His death followed within a minute or two, before he could be carried to his bed. Mrs. Brewer was with him when the end came. He was 73 years old.

David Josiah Brewer was born in Smyrna, Asia Minor, June 20, 1837, the son of Rev. Josiah and Ann Field Brewer. He was a nephew of the late Justice Stephen J. Field. He was graduated from Yale University in 1856 and the Albany Law school in 1858.

Justice Brewer was appointed by supreme court by President Benjamin Harrison to succeed Justice Stanley Matthews, taking his seat January, 1890.

He was the author of "The Pulpit," "The Twentieth Century from Another Viewpoint," "American Citizenship" and "The United States a Christian Nation."

Naturalist Dies on Shipboard.

Cambridge, Mass.—Alexander Agassiz, the eminent naturalist and president of the Camlet and Hecla Mining company, died on the steamer Adriatic, Southampton for New York. The news came in a wireless message from Rodolphe Agassiz, his son, Maj. Henry L. Higginson of Lee, Higginson & Co.

Town Suffers From Fire.

Welsh, La.—Practically the entire business section of Welsh was wiped out by fire. Thirty buildings were destroyed, entailing a loss of $200,000 with little insurance. The fire originated through some unknown cause in the Signal hotel, and quickly spread to other adjacent frame buildings.

Fatal Auto Accident.

Topeka, Kans.—George L. Seed of the Baltimore hotel, Kansas City, Kas., was killed, and C. L. Wilson, of Manhattan, Kans., was seriously injured when a motor car fell over a high cliff east of Topeka. The road is carved in.

Royal Arcanum Bars Saloons.

LANE'S WAY OUT OF IT

Family Clash Enabled Him to Satisfy Both His Hunger and His Conscience.

When Denny of the South side and Matt of the North side get together there is certain to be something doing. They were playmates on the "old end" and their friendship has survived many years and vicissitudes. So when they met recently in the downtown section it was to be expected that a bit of a celebration would ensue. The celebration consisted of several "looking things over" which things were mostly of a liquid nature, served in small glasses and their memories to "auld lang syne" lasted till well on toward midnight. At this time they found themselves on Smithfield street near the bridge where their attention was attracted by a sudden display in a restaurant window near by of the sign "Home Made Pork Pies—like Mother Makes—Ten Cents."

"Fwine!" cried Denny. "We'll get a couple to ate as we walk along."

They had just completed the purchase of two portions of the luscious display and emerged from the place when loud and clear from a nearby clock came the stroke of 12.

"Bad luck to us!" cried Matt in dismay. "'Tis Friday morning at all, all, an' us wid twinty cints worth of pork pies an' divil the bite dast we ate it."

"Musha, musha!" gasped Denny in real consternation.

Together they gazed hungrily at the tempting viands, as they leaned against the railing of the bridge. Then, as Denny's eye wandered aimlessly over the river, a glad light suddenly overspread his countenance.

"Whist, lad, we're saved!" he whispered excitedly. "Come along over to the Erie dappo an' ate yer fill. It's only eleven o'clock there."—Pittsburg Gazette Times.

POSTMAN TAKES BIG TUMBLE

Loses Footing on Slippery Mountain Side and Rolls and Slides Fully 300 Feet.

Shenandoah, Pa.—Thomas Williams, letter carrier, after making delivery to Ellangowan and Yatesville subs, was coming down the steep mountain side, which is covered with ice and sleet, when he missed his footing, plunged forward and rolled, tumbled and slid at a lively rate down the steep side for fully 300 feet.

Striking against ice rocks and stumps, grabbing for dear life at projecting bushes and twigs that were sticking out from under the deep snow, he managed by a great effort to steer clear of a mine breach at the foot of the mountain and to land in a ravine that was filled with snow, which saved his life.

His hands are badly lacerated and his body and limbs bruised, but fortunately not seriously.

There are many kinds of trees to make the world, and some of them are very curious. The Mexican maguay tree is said to furnish a needle and thread already for use. LAND OF THE TALKING MEN

Gilbert Islanders Helped by Civilization—Population Is Rapidly Diminishing.

London.—Some curious effects of civilization are related in a government report on a visit to the scattered Gilbert islands in the South Pacific, annexed by Great Britain in 1892. The results may be summarized as follows:

Advantages—Wars have ceased; the islands are kept in perfect order; extreme poverty is almost unknown; every man is secure in the possession of his piece of land; taxes are light and arouse no complaints; the native police are efficient and the native officials admirably honest; the houses are good, the roads clean, and hospitals have been established.

Disadvantages—Life is extremely monotonous and circumscribed, intercourse between the islands being forbidden; the old Spartan simplicity of living—chiefly on cocoanut and fish—has vanished, and rice, meat, sugar and biscuits are consumed; "clothes of shocking shape and atrocious color have almost replaced the picturesque kilt of leaves;" native arts and crafts have rapidly declined; decrease of population has set in, and the number of sterile marriages is growing rapidly; new diseases have been imported, and there is an alarming increase of phthisis.

The islands are coral, and the highest land is not more than twenty feet above high water mark. The natives consume daily about seven cocoanuts a head.

They have a parliament of unpaid members known as kaubure or "talking men," the Gilbert islanders being, in spite of the scarcity of topics, "the most wonderful talkers in all the South Seas." "The eternal land problem" is the ever fruitful theme of endless discussion.

A NEW USE FOR CATFISH

They Are Utilized in Portland, Oregon to Aid the Sewer Cleaning Department.

If the sewer is not broken, it can be cleaned by passing a rope through it, to be pulled backward and forward until the obstruction is loosened and removed. The street officials have a great deal of such work to attend to, and the worry connected with getting the rope through for a long time had them at their wits' ends. At last, however, they discovered a quick, sure and easy method.

The workman goes to the river, catches a catfish, ties a string to its tail, and drops it down a manhole into the sewer, when it at once starts for the river, and forces its way through any obstruction not as solid as brick, dragging the string after it. Then the workman goes as far down the sewer as he deems necessary, and picks up the string, which he uses to draw a wire through the sewer, and with this a rope is pulled through, and the sewer is soon cleared.

Why Dickens Wrote "Christmas Carol."

I noticed a statement in one of the papers recently that Dickens wrote his "Christmas Carol" with the express object of reviving the popular interest in the Christmas season and its festivities. This is a pleasing fiction which had often been previously met with. The fact is that Dickens wrote the "Christmas Carol" in the autumn of 1843 because he was short of money and in great need of $5,000. The most candid chapter in Forster's "Life" is the one (in the second volume) which relates the tale of Dickens' disappointment and despair when he received the "Carol" accounts, for instead of the $5,000 he "had set his heart and soul upon," the sum due to him was only $1,150. Dickens wrote: "My year's bills, unpaid, are so terrific that all the energy and determination I can possibly exert will be required to clear me before I go abroad." Dickens ultimately cleared $2,630 by the "Christmas Carol" on a sale of 15,000 copies.—London Truth.

HORTICULTURAL NOTES.

Another batch of cyclamens should be sown to follow the August sown plants.

Keep freesias quite cool, but water freely and let them have all the light possible.

Turn up all dirty land roughly to expose the weed roots to frost and repeat this at intervals.

Look over caladium, gloxinia and begonia bulbs and do not let them get too dry or they will shrivel.

Put out the new orchard just as soon as winter breaks, but be careful that the roots do not freeze.

An acre of apple trees will pay better than an acre of corn and does not require one-fourth as much work.

Cold fruit tastes better than fruit that has been kept in a warm room. This is particularly true of grapes.

When pruning apple trees cut the limbs as near the trunk as possible, so the wound may heal over quickly.

Always cook apples in earthen or granite ware utensils and use silver, granite or wooden spoons for stirring.

Keep the propagating cases and benches full, as many things can be multiplied at this season, saving room later.

When poor fruit is produced there is a reason. Aim to find it by a careful study of the trees and conditions.

Tree planting must not go on in frosty weather, but the preparation of the quarters for trees need not be delayed.

A grape vine can be purchased for ten cents which may produce several bushels of fruit each year for one hundred years.

Fruit will keep better in a barn cellar than in a house cellar, for the house cellar is warmed by the heated rooms above.

Preparing stakes and labels and siding up roots of flowers or vegetables in storage makes good work for bad weather.

CARING FOR THE STRAWBERRY

Plant Will Adapt Itself to Almost Any Garden Soil, But Rich, Moist Loam Is Best.

The strawberry will adapt itself to almost any good garden soil, but a rich, moist and fairly heavy loam is best. Anything approaching a light, gravelly, shallow soil is useless; but where such exists it can be improved by the addition of clayey soil and by a goodly portion of cow manure or well rotted horse manure. While the strawberry delights in a rather moist soil, yet it is essential that water should be drained off and not allowed to remain on the surface.

Select good plants. There is no economy in planting cheap or inferior stock. It pays to plant the best. There are a great many varieties of strawberries, but we must not be incautious, for many plants are lost each year by amateurs who neglect to follow this very precaution.

There is a difference of opinion regarding the best method of growing the plants—whether to the hill or single plant system, or to the hedge row, allowing four or six new runners to become established. We have tried both methods, and with the single plant or hill system we secured a smaller amount of berries, but much larger in size as well as more nearly uniform in size than those secured from the hedge row. Some growers are inclined to the hill system for the small bed in the home garden on account of the ease of cultivation and keeping the bed absolutely free from weeds and grass and giving easy access to the plants for applying mulch about them.

Following this method all runners should be cut off as soon as they appear, as they will weaken the main plant. Keep the bed free from grass and weeds; cultivate the soil frequently, but do not stir the soil near the crowns, as this would injure the growth of the plant.

Storing Echeverias.

Store echeverias in any shed or building from which severe frost is excluded. Sun shining on the plants after freezing does more harm to them than the actual frost.

Sowing of Acorns.

Regarding the sowing of acorns foresters sow them in narrow beds, broadcast, transplanting them when two years old.

thickly plated with gold and given to the exhibitor as his prize.

More than five million apples were exhibited and the prizes amounted to $35,000.

One Conductor Who Was Cured.

Mr. Wilford Adams is his name, and he writes about it.—"Some time ago I was confined to my bed with chronic rheumatism. I used two bottles of Foley's Kidney Remedy with good effect, and the third bottle put me on my feet and I resumed work as conductor on the Lexington, Ky., Street Railway. It gave me more relief than any medicine I had ever used, and it will do all you claim in cases of rheumatism." Foley's Kidney Remedy cures rheumatism by eliminating the uric acid from the blood. B. L. JONES.

F. M CONELL

Another candidate for the important office of sheriff is announced in this issue of The Banner. Mr F. M. Conell is well known and stands well in the community around Verbena, where he was born and raised, his present home being within 300 yards of his birthplace. His experience as warden of the penitentiary eminently fits him for the office of sheriff and if nominanned and elected he would doubtless make an efficient officer. As a life long Democrat be a ks for your vote and support.

B. L. JONES.

The latest candidate for the sheriff's office is Mr. B. L. Jones, of Mulberry, well and favorably known to the voters of Chilton county as a member of the Board of Registrars. He is a gentleman admirably adapted for the arduous duties of the sheriff's office, strong and hearty, with an evenly balanced mind, vigorous and courageous he would doubtless make an excellent sheriff if the voters are minded to give him the nomination and duly elect him.

And now Col. Roosevelt is on his way home, stirring up things generally as he comes along. He made things lively in Egypt and aroused the Vatican a. Rome.

VOLCANO TERRORIZES.

Mt. Aetna Threatens Catania With Fate of Ancient Pompeii.

Catania, Cicily.—This city is in terror and thousands of residents are fleeing to the hills for safety from Mt. Aetna. A heavy fall of ashes covered the streets to a depth of six inches. Thirty craters are belching fire and lava and red-hot stones bombard the country about the slopes of the volcano. The ashes have destroyed all the orchards that have escaped the lava between Catania and the crest of the mountain. Hundreds of tourists, the majority of them Americans, who came here to view the spectacle, made haste to depart. Fear has seized all of the 150,000 inhabitants of the city and the frenzy of the peasants about Aetna is almost indescribable.

The lava streams have been renewed and are advancing rapidly on the city. The belief is growing that the city will meet the fate of Pompeii. Professor Rocl, chief of the observatory which was destroyed in the first stages of the eruption, reported that 30 craters are active, an unprecedented number. The outpouring of lava, however, is scarcely greater than when only a dozen mouths were threatening the country. Fresh waves of lava are pouring over fresh territory.

Concord School House

Dear Editor:—As I have not seen anything from this place in a long time. I will say just a few words. Health of this community is not very good at presen . Our School closed last Friday p.m: we had a real nice time. There was several interesting speeches that filled the house with cheer. We were all sorry to see our school teacher leave. Prof. J. M. Parrish is one of the best and well known men of this county. Wherever you may see him he always has a smile on his face. I feel sure he has done his duty in trying to teach his pupils to do what is right; he is certainly a fine school teacher. He is one of the best school teachers that has ever taught school at this place. I feel sure all of his pupils wish him their best congratulations.

Mr. G. M. Taylor made an interesting talk which I am sure everyone that was there ebjoyed.

Miss Sallie Baker visited Miss Rosa Wyatt Sunday.

Mr. J. A. Maddox made a business trip to Birmingham Monday.

Misses Gracie Baker, Eseree and Gertrude Maddox visited Mr. J. M. Johnson's Sunday. Good luck to the Banner and its many readers.

DONIE L. MADDOX.

Popwell School House.

Editor Banner:—I ask for space to say that there will be a meeting of the Democratic club of Beat fifteen, at this place, Saturday night, April 9th. Every body invited. Will try to have an interesting program.

RUFUS L. POPWELL, Sec.

Stanton.

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space in your valuable paper to say a few words. Health of this community is very good at present and farmers of this community are hustling around about another crop. Nearly everybody is done planting corn and some have planted cotton. We are having some fine weather.

The singing at Mr. G. G. Lester's Saturday night was enjoyed by all present, and was also enjoyed sunday at Mr. Pool's Sunday night. SMr. Grover Binion and wife visited his mother, Mrs. Binion, Sunday.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Mellon twin babies, one boy and one girl.

I see some of us have plenty of little chickens. I guess we can feed the preachers this year.

Miss Zula Jeffcoat visited friends and relatives at Centerville recently.

Mrs. Josie Cox has been visiting her parents Mr. and Mrs. Cole.

NOBODY'S FELLOW.

OBITUARY.

Mountain Creek, April 4,1910. On Sunday night, March 20th 1910, the death angel visited the home of one of our beloved members, and called for their eldest son, Casper Linton Culpepper, who after a few days illness was lovingly and kindly borne away to his future home in the sweet beyond, where only those who love and serve God here on earth are permitted to go. He was one of the most beloved young men of our community. He was a consistent member of the Baptist church at Mountain Creek, and to know him was to love him.

The church of which he was a member was organized only about eighteen months ago, and the noble and much beloved young man was the first to be called from its membership.

A very impressive funeral service was conducted by his pastor, R. H. Long, on Monday, March 28th at 2 oclock p.m. Almost the entire citizenship of our community assembled to pay their last respects, and followed the remains to the new burying grounds. He being the first to be intered in the new cemetery.

The love and sympathy of the Mountain Creek church and Sunday school are hereby extended to the family of the deceased in their bereavement.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION

The Alabama State Christian Endeavor Union has secured the famous Stereopticon slides illustrating the Christian Endeavor Globe. These pictures are the finest that could be procured, depicting the work of this wonderful army of more than three and a half million young people in every country in the world.

A real treat awaits the young people of Alabama who see these views at the coming State Convention in Anniston, Ala., April 15-17. The Convention is to be known as a practical one. Instead of the many long speeches which usually burden programs in meetings of this kind, there will be but few addresses, and these will be short, much time being given to conferences which will provide an opportunity for exchange of thoughts and plans for conducting and bettering the work of the Christian Endeavor Societies in this State.

The number of delegates appointed to represent the various Societies of Alabama at Anniston is increasing daily, and a Convention great in numbers as well as in influence, is assured.

Alpine.

Again our hearts were saddened when the angel of death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Walker and bore to the realms of mortal glory the sweet spirit of their daughter Kate.

She was only sick a few days. We know she suffered untold agony, but she bore her suffering with great patience, never murmuring against the dear Father's will. All that loving hands could do was done to relieve her, but God in His infinite love saw fit to remove her from us to a home above where suffering is unknown.

She was only 22 years old; joined the Baptist church quite early in life, living up to a Christian duty she was ever willing to work for her dear master.

She was kind and affectionate to those around her, having a smile and a kind word for all she met She was much devoted to her many friends and loved by all. She was always ready to do any thing she could for them.

Dear Kate had the promise of a bright and intelligent young girl. But God had prepared for her a a noble work. We could not give our consent for her to go till Jesus said she is mine. She leaves a father, mother, four brothers and three sisters and a host of friends and relatives to mourn her loss.

What great consolation it is in this trying hour to know there is a home above where there is no cause to weep. While our hearts are bleeding we know she has joined the band of angels and we long to meet her there, in that happy home above where parting is unknown. We do not feelt hat we could call her back, or speak any consoling words or fill the vacancy of dear Kate.

Oh! how bad we all do miss her here on this earth. How happy this home would be if dear Kate was only with us.

She was laid to rest at Alpine cemetery, Brother Deason conducting the service. Dearest loved one we must lay thee in the peaceful grave, but thy memory cherished till we meet thy heavenly face.

There is more to a Fertilizer than Analyses

The mere mixing of materials to obtain analysis requires no special knowledge. The value of a fertilizer lies in the source from which the plant food is obtained.

Stays Pain in the Bladder, Kidneys and Back.

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining, or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back of the head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids or ankles: leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it. THE RUNAWAY WIFE

By DONALD ALLEN

(Copyright, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.)

"Married only six months, and it has come to this!"

Mrs. Horace Wareham had got married her husband from the stage. She had never even taken part in amateur theatricals, but she had seen melodramas and other plays, and she knew that as she pronounced the above words she must raise her arms over her head in despair. She therefore raised them, and looking into the mirror at the same time, she knew that the effect was good.

"We must separate!"

That was said with her arms down and in a firm voice. If she had had an audience no one could have doubted that the separation was close at hand.

"I shall run away!"

The words came with a stamp of the foot and a gesture of the arm, and the villain realized that he had no spring chicken of a girl to deal with. That is, she would have realized it had he not been in an office three miles away.

Miss Gertie Bascom was the daughter of a widow. Her mother had a husband all picked out for her by the time she was 19, but she refused him, and at the age of 20 married young Horace Wareham.

"Don't come back to me if he proves false and cruel and beats you with his fists!" was the mother's warning, and the girl in love laughed as she thought of the impossibility of such a thing.

Horace had said that she was dearer to him than life. He had looked around for a precipice to leap over to show his devotion. He had vowed that she should never know a housewifely care, and when she told him that she couldn't even cook a potato or sew on a button, he had laughed in glee and called it a romantic situation.

It was romantic as long as he kept this place and they boarded, but when he lost it and had to take another at less salary—and when he figured that it was cheaper to get a flat than to board—and when she burned the steak and the potatoes came on under-done —and when he asked who the devil made that slop, referring to the coffee, why, her eyes were opened at last.

"Well-Is-Well, I Have a Flat."

The bridegroom had sworn at his bride! She had shed tears and he had not offered to wipe them away with his napkin. Of course, there was no more speaking to each other that night. Next morning he remarked that he would look for a ten-cent restaurant, and that a man who married a wax doll deserved all he got. There was a crying spell after he left the house, and all of a sudden the young wife sprang up, dashed the tears from her eyes and exclaimed:

"We must separate!"

Her first idea was to go and tell her mother, but pride came to block the way. The mother would say that it was her duty to go back.

"Wait—the morning paper!"

A moment later the young wife was reading the help wanted advertisements. One of them was selected almost at once. It was for a parlor maid at liberal wages, and her course was clear. She would be a parlor maid at liberal wages, and neither Horace nor her mother should know what had become of her. They would shed tears and their consciences would prick them, but she would not relent. She would be "Lost Leonore" to them. They would advertise: "Gertie W.—Come back. All is forgiven. Very anxious. Mother on her dying bed, and husband almost a lunatic," and the police would send out a general alarm, but she would pay no attention to their wails.

The proper thing for a wife to do when she leaves her husband is to write him a farewell letter and pin it to the tablecloth. The advertisement had said that the parlor maid must apply at once, but Mrs. Wareham sat down and wrote a six-page letter and put in everything she could think of. Then she tore it up and wrote a few lines to say:

"I have been sworn at. I shall not stay to be beaten. It will be useless for you to try to discover my whereabouts. I hope you will find that ten-cent restaurant and be happy."

That was enough—that and the lonely flat awaiting his return at night. It was pinned to the tablecloth at the very spot where he had used that awful word "devil," and with something like tears in her eyes, Mrs. Wareham stood in the door, took a last look around and shut herself out. It was two miles to the residence where the parlor maid was wanted. Not a doubt of her being able to get the place and fill it crossed the young wife's mind. When her knock had been answered she was conducted into the presence of a grim old lady who took a long look at her and said:

"Have you had much experience, Miss?"

"Well—er—well, I have had a few," was the reply.

"Does that fit you for a parlor maid?"

"Why—why, it does, doesn't it?"

"How long were you in your last place?"

"Quite—quite some time."

"And your references?"

"I'm honest and respectable."

"Yes, but I must have references. I can't take your word for it. And I must say there is something rather peculiar about your coming here. This house has been robbed twice, and—"

Mrs. Horace Wareham arose and departed. She was angry at herself, at her husband and at the lady. She had been insulted, and it was Horace's fault. If he hadn't sworn at her she would not have had to go out into the world. She went to a stationer's and read some more ads. One was for a chambermaid at most liberal wages and little to do. She found the place a boarding house and the wages $2.50 per week and board. For the present, owing to the fact that there were 22 boarders in the house, and 22 rooms for her to take care of, she would have to sleep on the tubs in the laundry. She demurred at this and walked off and the landlady called her a chit.

With tears in her eyes and her teeth shut hard to keep the sobs back, the separated wife was on her way to investigate a third ad., when a gentleman raised his hat to her and halted to extend his hand and say:

"Mrs. Wareham, have you forgotten me, and I was Horace's best man at that?"

"Why, of course not. How do you do, Mr. Triggs? I—I was thinking."

"And I saw Horace two hours ago. He was buying a ring. Told me he was as happy as a lark. Said the honeymoon was going to last forever. Good chap, Horace, but of course it is useless to tell you so. Out shopping?"

"No—just for a little walk."

"Glad to have met you. Don't tell the old boy that I spoke about the ring. Guess it's a little surprise for you."

Horace had sworn at her. He had called her a wax doll. He had threatened to let her eat her own cooking while he gorged himself at a ten-cent restaurant. They had separated and she would never go back to him. She had walked half a block, when she turned about and headed for home. She would simply pass the building and see if it looked natural. As for climbing the two flights and unlocking the door—

The building was there, the flat was there, and the note had fluttered away. It was ripped off the pin, rolled into a ball and tossed from a window. A bride-wife sat with her back to the door that evening when the husband entered. She heard but did not stir. It was only when she felt a kiss on her cheek and a jewel case was placed in her hand that she rose up and excitedly exclaimed:

HIS HOURS OF HAPPINESS

Mr. Thwilglimglow Sets Forth the Extent of His Desires, Which Are Modest.

"As to what they think would contribute most to their happiness," said Mr. Thwilglimglow, "men differ, according to their fancies or their point of view. Some, not a few, would like to be rich, thinking that with wealth they could compass every desire, a very widely held delusion.

"Some men think they'd be happy with rank and power, giving them elevation over their fellows and command.

Some would be happy if they could give full sway to their philanthropic impulses to benefit their fellow man.

"Some would be happy if they could earn a little home, a modest house and lot that they could call their own.

"Some there are who fancy their happiness would be complete if they could have an automobile, and some would like a catboat or a motor marine vehicle; men have widely various ideas about this. Many of them when they get what they want find themselves sadly mistaken, that happiness is still afar. But I know distinctly and emphatically, complete and conclusively, what is the highest attainable happiness for me, and that is to get off my left shoe.

"I have rheumatism in the forward part of the sole of my left foot; if I were rich I suppose we'd call it gout. Call it by whatever name you will, it gives me great pain, and sometimes it seems as if I couldn't get through the day with it, but night comes at last, and I get home and then I get off that shoe.

"Ah! the blessed relief of giving that foot room, the profound pervasive, permeating happiness of it! I crave not now for wealth, I don't want rank nor power nor a catboat nor an automobile, and I don't care whether we've got the money for the rent or not; happiness with a big 'h' surges upon and saturates me when I pull off that left shoe."

The Moor's Motive.

Othello had just smothered Desdemona.

"She wouldn't give me the Chautauqua salute," he complained.

Thus we see the tragic effects of slighted heroism.

DWARF PEARS IN MUCH FAVOR

Horticulturists Report Them as Profitable and Trees Bear for Several Years.

(BY W. [illegible] BROCK OF COLORADO AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.)

Dwarf pear trees have been in much favor with eastern orchardists for many years, and many large and profitable orchards are of this kind. Many of them are profitable and the trees are in good condition after having been planted 50 years. This does not bear out the common notion that dwarf trees are short lived. Then, dwarfing induces early bearing, and with pears in particular, extra size and quality are secured because of the greater ease with which small trees may be pruned, thinned and sprayed.

There is no mystery connected with the dwarfing of trees. Scions of standard varieties are grafted or budded on small growing species within the family, or upon dwarf forms of the same species. In the case of pears the stock used is the quince. The quince is slow growing and seldom attains a height of more than 12 feet; usually less. Some varieties of pears will not unite with the quince, so what is known as "double working" is resorted to. This consists first in grafting a pear variety which is known to unite with the quince, such as the Vicar; then, when this has attained sufficient size, again grafting to the desired kind.

Dwarf pears should be planted deeper than standards. Dwarf pears should not be allowed to attain a height greater than 12 feet, else the end sought in planting them will be defeated. Severe pruning must usually be practiced, often as much as one-half to two-thirds of a season's growth must be removed, especially during the early life of the tree. By careful training the top may be spread so that a comparatively large amount of bearing surface is secured. Dwarf pears are often planted as close as ten feet apart each way, making 435 trees to the acre. At this distance, the trees will be too close together; 15 feet away each way, or 193 trees to the acre, would no doubt be preferable.

Crops for Cutover Lands.

Observations of the sandy pine cutover lands in Michigan, Wisconsin and Montana have been continued by the department of agriculture and work begun in the growing of hairy vetch as a seed and forage crop. The light, sandy soils of the north promise to be well adapted to this crop.

Mild Laxative for Baby Free

The child of today is the parent of the future, and whether it grows up healthy and strong, or puny and weak, depends upon the intelligence of its parents, for most children are born into the world healthy, but thousands become future weaklings between birth and the age of ten, when the parents are still in greatest control.

The prime cause of trouble is in the stomach. A baby that is digesting its food seldom cries and always looks cheerful; the little child whose stomach is good romps and plays and never whines; the growing child learns well at school and is eager for fun if its head is clear and its stomach light, and that means if it has no constipation.

The best and safest way to cure any irregularity of the stomach and bowels in children is by the use of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. This is a liquid laxative wonderful in its effect as Mrs. John W. Dunham, Apple Creek, O., Mrs. H. L. Cullum, Pinkneyville, Ind., and numerous others can testify who give it to their children with extraordinary results.

A bottle only costs 50 cents or $1 according to the size you want, and even one 50-cent bottle will do a wonderful amount of good in a family. It can be given to any member of the family in constipation, sour stomach, indigestion, torpid liver, dyspepsia, heartburn, sick headache and similar digestive troubles. It never gripes or strangles like pills, tablets, salts and powders, which should not be given to children, women or old folks.

If you have a child or other member of the family who needs, but has never used this grand laxative tonic, send your name and address to the doctor and a free trial bottle will be sent to your home. In this way you can find out what it will do without personal expense.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

"DROME" OUR NEWEST WORD

Prof. Alexander Graham Bell Declares That Is Way to Say That a Man Flies.

New York.—Prof. Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor, has coined a new word.

"In Canada," he said, "we speak of a man 'droming' from one point to another.

"The word aerodrome originated with a professor of Greek at Johns Hopkins university, and it means an air runner.

"We call our machines 'dromes'—much simpler and more correct, too, than aeroplane. For the fore and aft curves in the aerodromes of to-day make 'aeroplane' a misnomer. I think we shall all come to calling them 'dromes.'"

Minister Bars Nickels and Pennies.

New York.—Rev. W. I. Southern, acting pastor of the Baptist temple, Brooklyn, notified women to remove their hats in church and served notice that only silver and gold coins would be acceptable in the contribution boxes. He said some extremo creations in head dress distract attention from the service. He also called attention to the fact that the contribution boxes had been filled of late with a various assortment of mining products, including much nickel and copper.

HUMUS TO THE SOIL

Success in Using Fertilizers with Soiling Crops.

Application of Moderate Amount of Commercial Product Has Been Found to Be Quite Profitable —Legumes Beneficial.

(BY H. B. RICHARDS.)

My experience with using commercial fertilizers and soiling crops as a substitute for stable manure, especially for supplying humus to the worn out soil, has been very favorable. And I am lead to believe that the plan will be adopted more in the future, as we must have humus from other sources than just stable manure.

Of course manure can be produced in very large quantities, but every man with a very large farm cannot produce sufficient stable manure to go all over the farm, and consequently they must look to other sources.

A good grade of manure can be produced at home in the form of soiling crops and by adding some commercial fertilizer to produce extra growth. It will be found very satisfactory.

If clover, cowpeas, and other legumes are grown and plowed under they will add a large quality of nitrogen, having taken it from the air.

This, therefore, is a great gain, because nitrogen is the most costly ingredient of any manure. Then if we can add humus, and nitrogen, with small cost, will it not be easy to supply the other necessary ingredients without much cost.

If, however, nitrogen is to be added in commercial form, which I have found is often a wise thing to do in forcing a rapid growth, there is a form which I think will act more quickly, and in which it may be had more cheaply than in nitrate of soda.

This, however, should be put in shortly before it is expected to be taken up by the plants or trees, as it is very soluble and easily lost if not soon appropriated by the growing crops.

It is well to make two applications in one season; one in the early part and the other later on, when the growth is almost at its height. It will then cause a remarkably vigorous growth.

Nitrate of soda should not be put on the land in the fall or winter except in the case of winter crops for pasture, for it would be largely lost by the drainage water before the time for the crop to use it.

Cotton seed meal, dried bone, tankage, etc., all have considerable proportions of nitrogen in them and are good manures, but they dissolve slowly and should be applied several weeks or even months before they are expected to act on the crops.

Phosphoric acid is another necessary part of any complete manure and should be used in growing soiling crops or directly upon the orchard, vineyards, berry fields, and, in fact, almost everywhere that stuff is grown.

It is abundantly found in bones and phosphate rock. The dissolved forms, however, are much more available than those which are merely ground or crushed.

I have for several years tried the growing of soiling crops on my farm with the addition of fertilizers, which I think most adapted to my soil, and find I am able to enrich much more land than would be the case were I to depend entirely on the barnyard manures alone.

GENERAL FARM NOTES.

The small farm is the ideal place for the production of the draft horse. Europe has proven this for centuries.

Good care does not mean pampering. A pampered colt is as worthless as a starved one. There is a happy medium.

The reason there are more lice on sick fowls than on the well ones is because they are less active and do not dust themselves as often.

Grain fed to ducks should be placed in a vessel of water. This encourages slower eating and helps cleanse the nostrils.

Stick to one breed of horses, cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry. There will come no possible good from constantly crossing of breeds, the product finally becoming a nondescript.

Weanling mules are selling in Missouri at $75 to $100 per head. They are being sought by feeders who, with good care and liberal feeding, are enabled to handle them at good profit.

The same ration cannot with success always be fed two or more cows. The temperament and capacities of the animals differ. Discrimination should be practiced.

A Georgia farmer says he has never found anything that would surpass sweet potatoes for fattening hogs, and the meat and lard are of superior quality.

When used alone the cow pea will not make an exceptionally good quality of ensilage, due to the large amount of water in the "green crop," making a watery silage that is poorly and is not well relished by stock.

Do not allow the boy to ride the mares from the field with the horse string unmolested. Should the mare get frightened the chances are that his foot would get tangled in the harness and a bad accident would result.

If you really want to renew the happiness of your country home, try boarding at a city hotel or restaurant a day or two; then you will find that your common, everyday life is better and sweeter than anything that you found in the city.

The Mission of the Twelve

Sunday School Lesson for April 10, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 9:35—10:15, 40-42. Memory verses, 9:37, 38.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Freely ye have received, freely give."—Matt. 10:8.

TIME.—Autumn of A. D. 28.

PLACE.—Somewhere in Galilee, just where is not known.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

The Great Need of Laborers.—Matt. 9:35—10:1. What immediately followed the series of miracles studied in our last lesson? Christ's third preaching tour of Galilee, going "about all the cities and thickly clustered villages." He taught "in their synagogues," where there was much freedom of teaching. The subject of his sermons was "the gospel" of the kingdom, the announcement that the kingdom of heaven was at hand, the reign of righteousness and joy and peace. Moreover, he healed "every sickness and every disease." Christ saw that most of the Jewish teachers were "blind guides." They were more concerned with tithes of mint and anise and cummin than with the eternal welfare of their people.

What was Christ's remedy for this lack of laborers? Prayer. Definite prayer for more workers. Prayer directed to "the Lord of the harvest," who is the most interested in getting the harvest gathered. He sent forth "his twelve disciples."

II. The Laborer's Appointed.—Vs. 2-4. Who were the twelve apostles, and what significance is there in the way they paired off?

1. Simon Peter, fisherman of Bethsaida, who came to live in Capernaum, a man well along in years, one of the first to follow Christ, a man of impulse yet a rock, as his name implies. Coupled with Andrew, Peter's brother, another fisherman, a quiet, steady, thoughtful man, the "hidden helper" of the twelve. He was the first disciple of Christ, the evangelist of Peter; he found the lad with the loaves and fishes, and he brought the Greeks to Jesus.

James the son of Zebedee and (probably) of Salome the sister of Mary; therefore probably a cousin of Jesus according to the flesh. He was a fisherman, partner of Peter and Andrew. Coupled with John, his brother, probably the youngest of the twelve; "the disciple whom Jesus loved," who became the great apostle of love.

Philip, also of Bethsaida, whose business is unknown. Coupled with Bartholomew, probably Nathanael, the quick-witted man who deduced Christ's Messiahship from the second sentence our Lord spoke to him.

Thomas, "the doubting disciple," coupled with: Matthew (Levi), the tax-collector of Capernaum, and doubtless an extortioner.

James the son of Alphaeus, perhaps a brother of Matthew, coupled with: Thaddaeus (Lebbaeus), also called Judas, the son of James.

Simon the Canaanite (R. V. "Cananaean"), coupled with: Judas Iscariot, i. e., man of Kerioth, a town of Judah. Hence he was the only one of the disciples who was not a Galilean.

Why were they to go forth two by two? (Mark 6:7) To supplant each other and encourage each other.

What forms of opposition did Christ predict? 1. That in some places they would not be received or even listened to. 2. That they were to be scourged in the synagogues, in each of which three magistrates sat, with power to inflict scourging for misdemeanors. 3. They were to be brought before councils (the local tribunals of the towns), and even before Roman governors, like Felix, Festus, Gallio and Paulus, and kings, like Herod Agrippa and Nero. 4. Their own brothers and fathers and children would turn against them. 5. It would come to such a pass that all men, seemingly, would actually hate them.

How did Christ encourage the apostles in the face of these trials that were to come? He prophesied the punishment of their enemies in the day of judgment with penalties more terrible than would be meted out to the iniquitous heathen cities, Sodom and Gomorrah.

He reminded them of the Father's continual care of them.

Illustration. "There was once a legion of Christian soldiers in the service of a Roman emperor. The mandate came to the army that all should do sacrifice to the gods, on pain of death to every one that refused. The Christian legion to a man refused, preferring the sacrifice of life itself on the altar of duty."—James S. Bush. Christ's call is for such young men and young women, who scorn to worship the gods of this world, and are ready to place their lives and their all at the feet of their glorious Redeemer.

The talents, ours to-day, may be demanded by the Owner to-morrow. . . Fidelity, not success, regulates the final reward.—J. R. Macduff.

Beware of trusting to providence matters which Providence has plainly trusted to you.

New Hope for the New Year.

Without regard to what the past has been, the New Year brings glad promises to us all. Wrapped up in its unfolding days are new possibilities, new pleasures, new friendships, new chances for helping somewhere, new proofs of our Father's goodness. Let us wake hopefully each morning, work heartily through each day, and fall asleep each night with the confidence that our days and our doings are in God's keeping.

COVERING FOR CELLAR DOOR

Handy Arrangement When Ventilation Is Necessary—Prevents Children from Falling Into Opening.

ous for the little ones, and much more so if the door is located on the porch or in the house, writes B. Orlando Taylor in Popular Mechanics. To prevent anyone from falling into the opening and yet allowing a thorough ventilation of the cellar the following described device will prove very effective: Make a frame from one by four inch pine boards, one-fourth inch shorter and one and one fourth inches narrower than the opening. Cover the frame with wire netting and securely staple it to the wood. Hang the screen frame low enough to allow the main door to close down over it. Hinges may be fastened to a one inch block nailed to the side of the opening. Similar blocks are nailed to the opposite side to support the other side of the door. The wire screen door may be held in an upright position by a loop of cord hooked over a nail driven in the edge of a cleat on the main door.

GENERAL FARM NOTES.

Loose, wiry hair is said to be an indication of strength of bone.

The pig with the long head and coarse frame is slow to fatten.

It is a mistake to feed the brood sow heavily for some days after farrowing.

The composition of milk depends largely upon the kind of cows producing it.

Too many poultry raisers study care and feeding too much and marketing too little.

The outlay of feed that produces the largest flow is always the most economical.

Use fancy poultry and your profits will be double; be honest and your trade will treble.

What profits it a man if he raises a fine lot of chicks and then allows the middle man to get the biggest end of the profits.

At the present high prices of corn and wheat the poultry raiser who has to buy all of his feed must study how to cut close corners or he will lose out.

Stock up your incubators when eggs are cheap and thus have a batch or two of chickens coming on for the time when both eggs and chickens are high.

Geese men estimate that it takes about four geese to make one pound of feathers. Picking feathers from live geese has almost played out in this country.

As an agent in destroying weeds, clover will be found helpful in any area where grain crops come into the rotation, but it will be especially helpful in the case of crops grown on prairie soil where weeds are so prone to prevail.

Product from Five Holsteins.

Five Holstein cows at the Nebraska Agricultural college produced 75,560 pounds of milk in one year. This is equivalent to about 35,000 quarts, which at the wholesale price of five cents per quart is equal to $1,750. The calves from these cows at one year sold for $1,275, making a total of $3,025 for the five cows, or $65 as an average yearly earning for each cow. Counting $100 for the cost of keeping each cow, this would leave a yearly net income from one cow of $500. This is certainly a good showing for the earning capacity of a cow. Of course these were good cows, but good cows are the kind to keep.

Immune Animals.

W. M. Hayes, assistant secretary of agriculture, declares that there is good reason to believe that domestic animals can be bred resistant to tuberculosis and that in time we may have a breed of animals that are immune from many diseases that are now fatal.

Care in Breeding.

The thrifty farmer pays strict attention to the breeding of his animals. They are carefully guarded as to environment, diet, air and cleanliness so that the best market value can be reached.

Milk the Cow Dry.

Before you leave a cow milk her dry, but quit when the work is done. The last ounce may contain 30 per cent. of butter fat, but when that is drawn there is no more to bother about.

Making Best Butter.

The best butter comes from milk with the greatest per cent. of cream. Where the per cent. of cream is the largest there is not so much milk to sour and take up bad odors.

MANY GIRLS MISSING.

Tragedy of Ruth Wheeler Believed To Be One in Many.

New York.—Reports revealing that fifteen young girls have been missing since January 19, spurred on the authorities to wrest from Albert Wolter, 19 years old, a confession that he murdered 15-year-old Ruth Wheeler, the stenographer whose charred remains were found late Saturday. They expect to find a wholesale abduction plot before the mystery of the case is cleared away.

Kate Mueller, who lived with Wolter, as his wife, is under arrest as a material witness and she was sharply questioned. She had already made two damaging statements against Wolter. First, she says Wolter admitted to her that Ruth Wheeler had called on him at his apartment. Wolter has stolidly denied ever having seen the girl. She also declares that the gunny sack in which the victim's body was wrapped, had lain for weeks, serving as a mat, before the kitchen door of Wolter's flat. In Wolter's trunk the police found some wire which they say is identical with that in which the gunny sack was bound. The night shirt in which some of the girl victim's hair and hat pins were wrapped bears the intial "W." Wolter admits that this shirt is his.

Big Police Shake-up.

New York.—Mayor Gaynor's threat of a big police shake-up was fulfilled when Inspector McGafferty was deposed as head of the detectives, and Inspector John H. Russell, now in a downtown district, was put in his place. Six captains were transferred and Commissioner Baker announced that the whole police system would be rearranged.

This is an exact representation of the carton containing a bottle of St. Joseph's Liquid Liver Regulator, but it is much larger than this illustration, and printed in black ink on a yellow carton. Druggists and general merchants sell it at 50 cents a bottle, or you can get it direct from us at the same price. This is a delightful liver medicine—prompt, effective, and exceedingly pleasant to the taste. Try just one bottle to satisfy yourself—and you'll buy more.

ALABAMA STATE FAIR.

Birmingham, October 6-15, 1910, To Be the Biggest and Best Yet. Magnificent Agricultural Premiums.

The Alabama State Fair is getting out its preliminary premium list in order to give the farmers ample time to plant and prepare to compete for the splendid premiums they will offer in all lines of agriculture this year. Jefferson county will not be allowed to compete with the other counties of the State for the county exhibit premium. Special premiums have been provided for the best agricultural exhibits from Jefferson county. This is deemed fair in order that the other counties will not have to compete against Jefferson for the county prizes.

The prizes for corn and fruit displays are larger than ever offered by any Fair in the South, and are practically quadruple what they were last year.

The management is arranging for amusement features on even a greater scale than last year. The most nerve-thrilling acts, the finest music, the most magnificent fire works and splendid racing will be provided, and everything done to make the Fair this year the most successful ever held. When it is remembered that Birmingham had the best State Fair last year of any place in the South, one can imagine on what a grand scale the Fair will be conducted this year. Some of the agricultural premiums offered are as follows:

LAUNCHING OF S. S. "CITY OF ST. LOUIS."

Old Ocean, that champion Blue-beard of the centuries, gained a new and charming bride last Wednesday.

At Newport News, on March 30, Miss Louise Nugent, daughter of Daniel C. Nugent, a prominent merchant of St. Louis, acted as sponsor and performed the ceremony to which the "City of St. Louis," newest of the Savannah Line's new fleet, was gathered in his mighty arms. She is a sister ship to the "City of Montgomery," recently launched by the same Line, and the seven seas have seldom seen a bonnier bride than she.

Early in the coming summer, the sister ships will be placed in the coastwise trade by this North-South steamship line, and they will be the last word in the modern luxury demanded and received by those who to-day "go down to the sea in ships."

A revolution in these coastwise vessels has taken place since the days of this company's famous old "Rapidan," so popular among the languishing belles and chivalrous beaux of a simpler day, to whom the little side-wheeler was a wonder and delight.

The "City of St. Louis," like the "City of Montgomery," is 6,200 tons; the "Rapidan" was 868 tons; and very large and fine she was for the then development of ocean-going craft. The old side-wheeler is extinct as the buffalo and the hoop-skirt. Exit the old day in which the smaller vessel could accommodate, on each trip, the passengers to whom a trip North or South upon her was the well considered event of a life-time.

Enter, in haste, the new day in which such a trip is one of the joys of each recurring year. Hence the "City of Montgomery," and now her sister, the "City of St. Louis."

It appears that the "Savannah Line" has taken a shrewd look ahead and furnished the sea-going traveler with luxuries he had not, as yet, thought of demanding for himself. It is safe to predict that the sister ships will create a clientele of their own, too dainty and luxurious to travel North or South in a stuffy Pullman, when ocean breezes and a first-class floating hotel are obtainable for the trip.

The twin ships are noteworthy in possessing the largest cargo carrying capacity in the coastwise trade; they have, also, every known device for facilitating the prompt loading and unloading of freight. The placing in commission of these two large vessels speaks volumes for the expanding needs of the Savannah Line's trade. A more auspicious wedding ceremony than the launching of the "City of St Louis" has old Ocean never taken part in. Let us hope it will be a portent of good fortune for the new vessel in her busy life, of linking as an ocean shuttle, the "lands of pine and lands of palm."

Few of its passengers will realize the magnitude of the problems the builders of these ships have had to solve. At no time of the year do the ships leave and enter their two harbors in the same temperature. Delicate devices are necessary to heat, to cool, to ventilate the vessels. The winter frigidity of New York must be guarded against; the balmy southern breeze allowed full entrance. Electricity has solved the problem; it will cool and ventilate the boats in Summer and in Winter the ventilation system will be no less perfect.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

One of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

On Monday morning Clanton had an unexpected and most enjoyable treat. The misfortune of others brings joy to us. A wreck usually a source of woe, but in this particular instance, as no lives were lost, except, unfortunately, one few poor mules, and maybe some other dumb animals, the crashing up of two freights near Jemison, caused the stoppage of a special train loaded with Nobles of the Mystic Shrine from the North and this unavoidable delay gave us the opportunity to become better acquainted.

Shortly before 8 o'clock in the morning Clanton was wondering what that peculiar sound represented. It was something unusual and not recognized it. It might have been the screech of owls, but it was early in the morning, when owls are out of fashion; it might have been the hammering of boiler plate shops, but Clanton is too far distant for anything of that kind; it might have been music from the Industrial climb, but Clanton is not acquainted with that music. Anyhow it was music and Clanton turned out to see what was causing it.

And marching down the street Clanton saw a sight it had never seen before. A band of ten stalwart men dressed in Scottish fash., with their lower extremities clad in the tartan colors of their clan, and producing the peculiar wail of the bagpipe, made such a novel and sound as was certainly new to our town.

Death of Mrs. Mary Teel.

This estimable lady passed away on Monday morning after a sickness of some time, leaving a husband, three sons and one daughter to mourn the loss of a good wife and loving mother. The funeral took place at the Clanton cemetery on Tuesday, a large number of sympathizing friends attending.

Samuel Scott, the Photographer, takes elegant pictures, it is a pleasure to walk into his studio.

Mr. Moses Moore died Tuesday night at an advanced age, we are sorry to learn as we go to press.

FARMER'S UNION.

A special session of the Chilton County Farmers Union is called to meet at Clanton on Saturday, April 30 at 10 a. m. for the purpose of electing one or more delegates to the National Convention to be held at St. Louis, Mo., May 2-8 1910. All local unions should act accordingly.

Nervous Prostration For Three Years

"Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine cured me of a period of nervous prostration of over three years duration, and the Anti-Pain Pills are as necessary to us as the roof of our house. They have been household remedies with us for many years."

WM. J. LOUGHRAN,

Philadelphia, Penna.

Much sickness is due to nervous troubles. Headache, dizziness, epilepsy and insanity are nervous troubles. Then there is a large class of disorders which arise from a weakness of the nerves of an organ or part, as weak lungs, heart, stomach, kidney, bladder, eyes, etc. Dyspepsia and indigestion are usually the result of nervous disorders.

Restorative Nervine soothes the irritated nerves, and assists the nerve cells to generate nerve force.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold by all druggists. If the first bottle fails to benefit, your druggist will return your money.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

On Monday morning Clanton had an unexpected and most enjoyable treat. The misfortune of others brings joy to us. A wreck is usually a source of woe, but in this particular instance, as no lives were lost, except, unfortunately, some few poor mules, and maybe some other dumb animals, the smashing up of two freights near Talakto, caused the stoppage of a special train loaded with Nobles of the Mystic Shrine from the North and this unavoidable delay gave us the opportunity to become better acquainted.

Shortly before 8 o'clock in the morning Clanton was wondering what that peculiar sound represented. It was something unusual and few recognized it. It might have been the screech of owls, but it was early in the morning, when owls are out of fashion; it might have been the hammering of boiler plate somewhere, but Clanton is too far dead for anything of that kind; it might have been music from the celestial clime, but Clanton is not at acquainted with that music. Anyhow it was music and Clanton turned out to see what was causing it.

And marching down the street Clanton saw a sight it had never seen before. A band of ten stalwart men dressed in Scottish fashion, with their lower extremities garbed in the tartan colors of their clan, and producing the peculiar skirl of the bagpipe, made such a sight and sound as was certainly new to our town.

Death of Mrs. Mary Teel.

This estimable lady passed away Monday morning after a sickness of some time, leaving a husband, three sons and one daughter to mourn the loss of a good wife and loving mother. The funeral took place at the Clanton cemetery Tuesday, a large number of sympathizing friends attending.

Samuel Scott, the Photographer, takes elegant pictures, it is a pleasure to walk into his studio.

Mr. Moses Moore died Tuesday night at an advanced age, we are sorry to learn as we go to press.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Voters of Chilton County.

I wish to say that having reconsidered I have declined making the race for Sheriff. I think my personal interest at home is such that will not justify me to leave, and give my attention to the duties of the Sheriff's office should I be elected. Now to my friends who were taking an active part for my interest I beg to say that I feel as grateful to them as if we had fought the battle through and I had been duly elected.

Should an opportunity present itself I am ready and willing to return the favor shown to me then.

Yours very truly,
F. M. CONNELL.

THE CHILTON COUNTY FAIR ASSOCIATION.

The Chilton County Fair Association met on last Saturday, and arranged a premium list, which is to be put in circular form and distributed among the farmers and other people who may feel an interest in this feature of of the fair.

We are given to understand that the capital stock is about all subscribed and the prospect bids fair, for a successful enterprise, so we say to the people all let's pull all together to help bring our county to the very fore-front in an agricultural line, it can be done, and the fair will prove a great factor in that line.

MONROE GONE TO REST.

Mr. Monroe Frith, a much loved young man of Adams, departed this life of pain and sorrow, March 31st, at an infirmary in Selma, after an illness of only a few days.

Monroe was a member of Mt. Carmel Baptist church, having given himself to Jesus some time ago. It would be so nice if we could all leave as good a name behind us as he did. All his friends in speaking of him say, Monroe was a good boy. The remains were laid to rest in Mt. Carmel cemetery. He leaves a number of friend and relatives to mourn their loss, but their loss is his eternal gain.

ONE OF HIS FRIENDS.

Saved From The Grave.

"I had about given up hope, after nearly four years of suffering from a severe lung trouble," writes Mrs. M. L. Dix, of Clarksville, Tenn. "Often the pain in my chest would be almost unbearable and I could not do any work, but Dr. King's New Discovery has made me feel like a new person. Its the best medicine made for the throat and lungs." Obstinate coughs, stubborn colds, hay fever, la grippe, asthma, croup, bronchitis and hemorrhages, hoarseness and whooping cough, yield quickly to this wonderful medicine. Try it, 50c and $1.00. CHILTON SOIL SURVEY.

Editor Banner:—I think that you can safely announce to the farmers of Chilton county that the soil-survey of the county will be commenced some time next summer or fall. I have just had a conference with Doctor Milton Whitney, the chief of the Bureau of Soils in the Agricultural Department, and urged the necessity of a survey for Chilton (as I had previously requested several times), and he assured me that the Bureau would do everything in its power to start the work early next Fall, if not sooner.

Wherever I have succeeded in getting a soil-survey made, it has proven to be of inestimable benefit to the farmers, and I am sure that such will be the case in your county. I realize fully the deep interest in modern methods of agriculture that has been manifested by the people of Chilton, and I am always glad to do anything in my power to promote the good cause.

With kindest personal regard, I am,
Very truly yours,
W. B. CRAIG.

Macedonia.

We have seen nothing from this place in a long time so please give us space for just a few lines.

Our school is out, or rather vacated till summer. We have had a very successful term of six months. Miss Alberta Moore, of Knoxville, Tenn., was our principal teacher, with Miss Bessie Mix, assistant. This is the second term here for Miss Moore. We have a nice little two story building, and a beautiful location, and by the way some real smart children.

Our Sabbath school is not what it could and should be; we have the material for a live Sabbath school if all would turn out, but too many of our parents send their children and stay at home themselves.

A Good Meeting.

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a short space in your paper to make a report of S. S. Convention held at Bethsalem last Sunday.

We had a splendid meeting. Thirty-four delegates came, gaily representing nine of the ten S. S. in the district. All the speakers except two, were present. To our great delight, Miss Gibson was with us with inspiring thought. Two brethern, Gray and Thornton, of Mountain Creek, helped us greatly. All the school desires to organize a training class soon. Hope it is will be done next Sunday.

At the close of our meeting brother William J. Billingsby was elected president, and Miss Bessie Deerbin, secretary.

If I can ever be of any service to any school or individual along the line of teacher training, please write me at East Lake. Devotedly,

My appetite was very poor and my general condition was much run down. I have been taking Foley's Kidney Pills but a short time and now sleep as sound as a rock. BELSHAZZAR ORGY

New Jersey Shocked at Reported Revels of Legislators.

LAST NIGHT WAS A GAY TIME.

Wine and Whiskey Flowed Like Water and Startling Dances by Women Friends of Solons Said to Have Been Enacted in Committee Rooms.

Trenton, N. J.—The New Jersey assemblymen who put one over on Belshazzar, in the orgies which closed the thirty-fourth session of the lower house on Thursday, have not only brought about a storm of denunciation from every pulpit in the state, but have given Governor Fort a lever to pry the lid off of a situation which for civic corruption may make the exposures in New York legislature resemble a popping of a fire cracker.

Revelry a Disgrace.

Governor Fort, after declaring that the revelry of the legislators and their women friends was a disgrace to the state, intimated that he was shortly to call a special session of the assembly to investigate the obscenities which are said to have been enacted.

For some time Governor Fort has been at war with interests both in and out of New Jersey, which have been attacking his administration. Some of them center about Atlantic City and their hand was shown when the saloon-keepers in the coast resort defied the governor to send the militia to close their places on Sunday.

Although the state laws are supposed to govern Atlantic City, the resort has a code of its own in direct opposition to some state ordinances.

Indecent Dances.

Governor Fort's legislative program, which somewhat resembled that of Governor Hughes, has been attacked and fought bitterly. At least one millionaire contractor attended sessions of the legislature openly, although he is not a member. Governor Fort is a reformer and the revelations of "hoochcoochee" dances said to have been enacted by women in committee rooms for the legislators, the wholesale consumption of champagne, whiskey and beer in the assembly rooms while the legislature was in session and the manner in which women thronged the galleries and called in familiar fashion to their men friends below have left the governor speechless with mortification and anger.

So embarrazed was he at the action of the members of the house of delegates that he quietly slipped away from Trenton, but just before going he said:

"I am so much astonished that I can scarcely think of the disgrace which has been brought upon the state. I have received letters and petitions from ministers and women asking that action be taken without delay. Something will be done, and that very soon, although I cannot reveal now what course will be pursued."

Legislative Probe Demanded.

Trenton, N. J.—A special session the legislature to investigate the alleged orgies in the state house that marked the end, with an all-night meeting, of the last session, has been demanded by Mark A. Sullivan, minority leader, of Hudson county, in which is Jersey City. He made the demand in a letter to Governor Fort. The alleged drinking and presence of women in the state house has aroused a storm of indignation throughout the state.

GIRL SAVES TRAIN.

8-Year-Old Flags Train About to Dash Onto Burning Trestle.

Ramos, La.—A child six years old saved the Southern Pacific Flyer from dashing around a curve into a burning bridge here by flagging the train.

The bridge is a few miles out of this city and caught fire from burning grass. A sick woman who saw the bridge burning, but was unable to leave her bed, called the child in and sent her out with a flag. She reached the track just in time. The train detoured. The little girl was kissed by nearly every woman on the Flyer when they learned of their escape.

14 MEN LOSE LIVES.

Dynamite Explosion at Construction Camp in Texas.

Novite, Texas.—Fourteen men were instantly killed and another fatally injured by the premature explosion of a heavy charge of dynamite at a construction camp on the Texco Extension of the Santa Fe railroad.

Only three of the dead men have been identified, owing to the fact that the bodies of the men were torn almost into shreds by the force of the explosion.

Fight Duel About Woman.

New Orleans.—Word was received here of a fatal duel over a woman on a plantation at Tilden, La., between two wealthy men. Charles Collins was killed and L. L. Lemeine was fatally shot. The two men had been rivals for the hand of the same woman, and it is said Collins was the one who was successful in his suit. The men met at the home of the woman and a quarrel followed.

JOHN DALZELL.

Congressman Who Was Selected as Head of New Rules Committee.

USED SELF AS BAIT.

Pretty Woman Charged With Fraudulent Matrimonial Scheme.

Pittsburg, Pa.—Another indictment has been returned on charges of graft, romantic instead of councilmanic. Alice Peterson, a pretty Johnstown woman, who has manners of refinement, is charged in a true bill returned by the federal grand jury with having used the United States mail to conduct a fraudulent matrimonial scheme in which she was the bait. The woman is alleged to have held a large correspondence with men in western cities, and when love affairs had ripened to a proper point, she would ask them to send money for her fare to their town so that she might marry them.

Among the exhibits offered by the postoffice inspectors are a number of fervid letters. One was addressed to J. Frank Ross, of Eugene, Ore., whom she requested to send her $100, so that she could pay for an operation to be performed on her mother.

The third letter was of a bright and cheerful nature, and was addressed to Ben O. Baker, Ambrose, N. D. In this letter the writer asked for $57.82.

FAMOUS MURDER TRIAL.

Trial of Dr. Hyde for the Murder of Colonel Swope Begins April 11.

Kansas City.—The trial of Dr. B. C. Hyde, accused of the murder of Colonel Thomas H. Swope, will begin April 11. Dr. Hyde has been at liberty under $100,000 bail. The case will be tried before Judge R. S. Lathshaw, and the representatives of Colonel Swope's estate have engaged the best legal talent money could secure, while Dr. Hyde with his wife's and his own fortune has scoured Missouri for lawyers famous for their ability. The trial promises to be one of the most sensational ever tried in this country. While Dr. Hyde will be tried for the murder of Colonel Swope, who was many times a millionaire and gave Swope park to Kansas City, he has been accused of causing the death of Christian Swope and the serious illness of other members of the Swope family. Dr. Hyde was indicted by the grand jury for administering typhoid fever germs to Colonel Swope.

EXPLOSION ON SHIP.

Fire Followed and About Twenty Persons Were Injured.

Dover, England.—A terrific explosion has occurred on the British steamer Cairnroma off Dungeness, which wrecked the women's quarters, killing one child and injuring a number of women and children.

The steamer caught fire and a panic ensued, in which men fought for the possession of the boats and had to be beaten back by the crew to allow the women to be taken off first.

In all twenty were seriously injured and not less than fifty were slightly injured by the explosion and in the panic that followed it.

Will Spar With Jeffries.

Chicago.—Joe Choynski, the veteran prize fighter, whose record includes a 20-round draw with Jeffries and a three-round knockout administered years ago to Jack Johnson, has telegraphed Jeffries consenting to act as Jeffries' sparring partner. Choynski will leave for the west next week. George Cotton, the colored fighter, signed up as a sparring partner with Johnson.

Bribery is Charged.

Charleston, W. Va.—Former Councilmen J. W. Cook and F. H. Hanke, a brewery agent, were indicted by the grand jury on the charge of bribery in connection with the changing of a "dry" majority in the city council to a "wet" majority.

BANDITS GET $5,000

Loot Bank and Flee on Passing Freight Train.

WERE PURSUED BY A POSSE

Exciting Chase Then Took Place, the Pursuers in Autos Firing at the Fleeing Robbers on the Empty Freight Cars.

Chicago.—Five masked bandits escaping with $5,000 stolen from the bank of Coal City, at Coal City, Ill., exchanged shots with a posse, three of the robbers being wounded and captured.

Coal City is 63 miles southwest of Chicago. The entire population was aroused by the explosion in the bank, and the ensuing pursuit.

Bandits Tied Watchman.

The marauders entered the town on a passing freight train and began operations by tieing Barney Ghetto, the night watchman, and Washington Frye, the night engineer of the electric plant.

Then they blew up the bank building and shattered the safe with a charge of nitro-glycerine and after seizing the contents of the safe, leaped on a Sante Fe freight train with their plunder which was partly in stamps. Three hours later three men suffering from wounds inflicted by shot were arrested at Morris, Ill.

The wounds were received when a posse formed along the line of the Sante Fe came up with the fugitives, when many shots were exchanged.

Two of the bandits made their escape and are supposed to have taken the bank loot with them.

CARTER TATE WINS FIGHT.

His Nomination as District Attorney is Confirmed by Senate.

Washington.—The nomination of Hon. Carter Tate to be district attorney of the northern district of Georgia was confirmed by the senate. Mr. Tate wins out after a long and trying fight. The attorney general and members of the senate judiciary committee who examined the report of Inspector Ramsay on the work of the district attorney's office, said the charges made against Mr. Tate, so far as proven, were trivial.

After the nomination was sent in by the president, it was again held up at the request of Senator Brandegee, of Connecticut, acting under a request from Representative Tilson, of that state. A subcommittee, composed of Senators Bacon, Dillingham and Sutherland, investigated the reason for this delay and found them to be groundless, and reported the bill.

ACCIDENT ON GEORGIA ROAD.

Two Killed and Several Injured Near Augusta.

Augusta, Ga.—Two were killed and five injured as a result of a head-on collision between two freight trains on the Georgia road, 22 miles from Augusta.

The collision was between westbound train No. 209 and extra eastbound train No. 29.

Both engines were completely demolished and the box cars were broken into splinters.

Mixed up orders were the cause of the wreck, it is reported.

Put Ban On Gambling.

Washington.—The house committee on agriculture has practically unanimously agreed to report favorably a bill prohibiting gambling in cotton futures.

BROOKLYN BANK CLOSES.

Borough Bank Closed by State Superintendent.

New York.—The Borough bank, of Brooklyn, 20 Court street, has been closed by order of State Superintendent of Banks Cheney. It was understood that the reason for the suspension was inability to realize on assets inherited by the present directorate from the old bank.

The closing of the Borough bank follows that of the Union bank, which suspended business a few days ago. The president of the Borough bank is B. R. Shears.

Later it was stated that none of the depositors would lose a penny and that the closing was merely a precautionary measure.

Railroad Law Held Invalid.

Washington.—Holding that the action of the state of Arkansas in requiring railroads to furnish cars for local shipments within five days from the time they were ordered was a buden on intestate commerce, the supreme court of the United States reversed the supreme court of Arkansas.

Editors to Meet in Americus.

Atlanta.—At a meeting of the executive committee of the Georgia Weekly Press Association, held in room 714 Candler building, the date of the annual meeting of the association at Americus was fixed for July 12 and 13. The annual outing will follow the business session at Americus.

Woman's Weird Suicide.

Cleveland, Ohio.—A woman, apparently about 23 years old, deliberately laid her head on the rails of the Nickel Plate road's tracks and was beheaded.

J. G. A. LEISHMAN.

The United States Ambassador to Italy.

JEKYL-HYDE CASE.

Burglar Who Terrorized Town Proved a Business Man.

Springfield, Mass.—Laying his crime to love of excitement and a mania for stealing caused by an injury to his head in boyhood, Bertram Gage Spencer, the dry goods clerk, broke down under 24 hours of merciless grilling and confessed that he was the masked burglar who had terrorized Springfield for two years and had reached the climax of his wild career by murdering Miss Martha B. Blackstone last Thursday evening.

In his amazing confession, although many of the details are being withheld until the trial of Spencer, makes it clear that associated with his overpowering desire to steal were an intense love of excitement and a high degree of personal vanity. This latter trait Spencer gratified by baffling the police and reading the newspaper reports of his exploits. The accounts of his daring crimes fascinated him and fostered his egotism. The police declare he is a morphine fiend.

An elopement approaching the romantic entered into Spencer's crimes, for, coupled with his other motives, was a desire to secure money wherewith to purchase furnishings for his home in West Springfield, thus furnishing a handsome setting for his young and pretty wife, for whom he bore a strong affection.

While admitting the killing of Miss Blackstone, Spencer said he did not intend to shoot her, but had lost control of himself when she repeatedly shrieked. Even then, he asserted, he had fired only to frighten her and the three other women who confronted him in the Dow house.

Spencer was arraigned in the police court and was held without bail for further hearing April 15.

SUSPECTS CAUGHT

Bankers Killed by Yeggmen Near Pittsburg.

ROBBERS GOT SMALL AMOUNT

McKees Rocks Is Scene of Sensational Tragedy—Police Looking for Italians Charged With Murder and Theft.

Pittsburg.—Three men have been arrested and are being held on suspicion of being members of a gang of four yeggmen who held up the Victor Banking Company, at McKees Rocks, killing Cashier Ignatz Schwirtz, Bookkeeper Samuel Friedman and seriously injuring Robert King, who attempted to stop the robbers as they ran from the bank. The suspects give the names of William Brown, a negro teamster; James Brown, a negro coal miner, and Faldatto Zengrelli, an Italian. The police say the men could not give a good account of themselves when questioned.

The Victor Banking Company did a business largely with foreigners, and did a night business for their convenience. McKees Rocks and vicinity is greatly excited over the hold-up and threats are made as to what will happen to the yeggmen if captured before the police get them.

A general police alarm has been sent out, and many officers and detectives are making a diligent search for the robbers. The dragnet spread is so general and thorough that it is believed the bandits can not elude capture.

The scene of the hold-up was practically the same as that of the famous "bloody Sunday" battle during the recent car works strike, in which several persons were killed and many injured.

TAFT IS TROUBLED.

His Cabinet Said to be Threatened With Disruption.

Washington.—The cabinet of President Taft is threatened with disruption. Dispite the denials given out in response to persistent rumors of approaching resignation of cabinet officials, the impression is widespread that within a short time two or three members will get out.

The cabinet circle is torn with dissension, and the widespread popular criticism of the administration has not helped to smooth ruffled feelings or to harmonize differences.

President Taft said he knew nothink of the contemplated resignation of cabinet officials. Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh gave out both formal and informal denials of stories published in the New York papers.

...DVICE FOR NERVOUS MAN

...Rest in Work, Says One Who Has Found It to Be Successful Cure.

The famous Harvard geologist, Nathaniel Southgate Shaler, who died about four years ago, was a man of singularly wide range and vivacity of conversation. In a single hour, once a correspondent of the New York Sun, he would discuss topics as different as national politics, the seeds of the fossil Cordilleras, and the question whether there might not be some ethical considerations bearing on mathematical studies.

Perhaps the most striking thing about him, after his unbridled warmth of heart and capacity for making friends free of his time and thought and interest, was his surprising industry. In one of the earliest occasions when I was thrown into contact with him and obliged to ask for considerable portions of his time I remember having asked if he were not overdoing.

"No," he replied. "I have a great many things to do, and a couple of years ago I had nervous prostration. I went to Germany and tried all kinds of cures for it, but they did no good. So I came home, and ever since I've been trying to work it off."

Asking advice from Shaler was a very different thing from seeking it from ordinary sources. On one occasion—apropos of something now quite forgotten—he told the story of his being asked by a graduate of the Harvard Divinity school how he might best fit himself for the work of his chosen calling. The freshly-graduated theological student did not feel sure that he knew as much about men as he did about divinity.

After a moment's thought, the professor said, in substance:

"Go to Colorado, get down into a drift, and dig for two years with the miners. Possibly you'll know more about men than you do now."

The young man did so, with the result that he came back at the end of the period to thank his adviser for the good he had derived from his most unconventional Wanderjahre.

SYMPATHY NOT IN ORDER

Most People Will Agree That Ungenerous Woman Got Merely Her Just Deserts.

It seems a pity to attempt to point out the moral of the following story, for its lesson so much depends on the experience of the individual reader. A gentleman, says a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer, wished to make his wife a present of a lace scarf, but had no desire to pay an extravagant price.

"I want you to buy a new lace scarf for Cousin Amelia," he said to his wife. "Choose something nice—something you would get for yourself."

The wife, however, had her own ideas as to generosity in buying presents, and the purchase, when she made it, consisted of a very simple article.

"H'm!" said the husband. "Is that what you would have chosen for yourself?"

"Exactly!" she replied.

"Well, my dear, keep it. I meant it for you!" he exclaimed, with an amiable smile.

ADVICE FOR NERVOUS MAN

Best Relief in Work, Says One Who Has Found It to Be Successful Cure.

The famous Harvard geologist, Nathaniel Southgate Shaler, who died about four years ago, was a man of singularly wide range and vivacity of conversation. In a single hour, says a correspondent of the New York Sun, he would discuss topics as diverse as national politics, the seeds of the fossil Coniferae, and the question whether there might not be some ethnological considerations bearing on mathematical studies.

Perhaps the most striking thing about him, after his unexcelled warmth of heart and capacity for making people free of his time and thought and interest, was his surprising industry. On one of the earliest occasions when I was thrown into contact with him, and obliged to ask for considerable portions of his time, I remember having asked if he were not overbusy.

"No," he replied. "I have a good many things to do, and a score of years ago I had nervous prostration. I went to Germany and tried all kinds of cures for it, but they did no good; so I came home, and ever since I've been trying to work it off."

SITS ON A STRANGER'S H

Government Official Pays $1.50, Wonders If He Is Not Victim of Swindle.

Chicago.—Will the weight of a 280-pound man falling on a $2 derby damage it to the extent of $1.50?

John M. Hubbard, assistant postmaster, replies in the negative.

"I paid him $1.50, and now I learn he victimized my friends in the same manner and—worse yet—with the same $2 hat," said Mr. Hubbard to a group of friends in the federal building.

"He came in and waited patiently to speak with me. A stranger he was, but he had an honest face. Once at leisure I turned and shook his hand, at the same time sitting down. He yelled: 'Look out, sir; my hat!' But it was too late.

"'I am awfully sorry,' I began as I picked up the crushed flat thing that lay in my chair. I tried hard to suppress a smile, but finally laughed outright. And he was angry. No mistake about that.

"'That is my only hat, sir,' he said, humble enough. I corrected him, saying, 'It was your only hat.'

"'I am a poor man, out of work, and my wife and four children'—here I interrupted him. 'How much?' I asked. 'It's ruined,' he said. 'How will a dollar square it?' I asked. 'I can't get a new one for that,' he complained. When I handed him $1.50 he grabbed it greedily and left."

Mr. Hubbard reflected for a time, then asked in a tone barely audible: "I wonder if that is the same fellow that worked my friends in the same manner and with the same hat?"

Laughter was the only answer that came from his group of friends. Other friends call him on the telephone many times during the day now and ask him if he buys old hats.

SEA BIRDS GIVEN A REFUGE

La Rue Holmes Nature Lovers' League Gets Possession of Island Off Stone Harbor.

Summit, N. J.—Negotiations have just been completed through which the La Rue Holmes Nature Lovers' league comes in possession of a permanent refuge for the gulls and other birds of the New Jersey coast.

Shortly after its organization, several years gao, the league became interested in the project of obtaining possession of an island, with an area of about 150 acres, near Stone Harbor, Cape May county, the nesting place of gulls and other birds. The island has now become a possession of the organization and will hereafter be known as the La Rue Holmes Nature Lovers' league bird refuge.

In times past this nesting place was the scene of merciless slaughter among the gulls, thousands being sacrificed to meet the demand for their plumage. Through the work of the National Audubon society a remnant of the birds was saved, a competent warden was placed in charge, and now from 1,000 to 1,200 gulls breed in the accustomed place over the marsh land. The Nature Lovers' league now takes up the matter of maintaining the warden service.

CARRYING OF SEEDS COSTLY

Representative Sims of Tennessee Gets Agricultural Department Figures in Record.

Washington.—Representative Sims of Tennessee has had inserted in the records a statement he obtained from the agricultural department showing the weight and cost of transporting seeds distributed by senators and representatives.

The department says that the total weight of vegetable seeds sent through the mails, including the containers, is 1,351,390 pounds. The postage on vegetable seeds at second class rates would be $135,513.90 annually.

The total weight of flower seeds sent through the mails last year was 76,073 pounds, on which the total postage if paid, would be $760.63.

SIZE OF A BUFF ORPINGTON

Short, Stout, White Legs, Set Wide Apart, Are Among Strong Characteristics of Bird.

When once you study a real Orpington, its size and type, you will appreciate its difference from all other varieties. Its type is intensified by the shortness of the legs, the shape of the back, saddle and tail, the long, level keel, carried very low down, the poise of the neck, head, tail, etc., also very materially by the fluff and looseness of the feathering on the bird. A bird of true Orpington type mounted up on high legs would be ludicrous. The short, stout, white legs, set wide apart, are among the strong characteristics of the breed. Mr. Cook realized long ago that the shank of the leg neither lays the egg nor is it eaten on the table, and therefore length is entirely superfluous. A long-legged Orpington should always be discarded from the breeding pen.

Buff Orpington Cock.

The easiest error for a breeder to fall into is to let the size and type run down in the pursuit of color. Color is all right in its place, but the proper thing to strive for in the breeding of Buff Orpingtons is to combine size, type, color and other qualities all together in the development of the perfect bird. You must constantly struggle to breed up in size and type as well as in color. If any of these are neglected the birds rapidly degenerate.

BARRELS AS A SMOKEHOUSE

Every Farmer Should Have Convenient Place Where Piece of Meat Can Be Smoked.

Every farmer ought to have a well-appointed smokehouse, but if he hasn't and his wife wants to smoke a few pieces of meat she may be able to do so by the use of two barrels, as shown in the picture. In the upper barrel screw hooks, which may be bought at any hardware store for a few cents, into the bottom or sides, or run rods through the barrel and hang the meat over these by means of wire hooks. Set an iron pan or kettle in the bottom barrel and make a fire of hickory chips, keeping it smothered sufficiently to always produce a dense smoke. Corn cobs make a fairly good smoke, but hickory or other hardwood chips are more desirable.

Cheap Little Smokehouse.

Feed Hens Meat.

The meat food must not be omitted, as it takes the place of the insects eaten naturally by fowls during the summer. Either green bone or beef scrap will do, or pieces of meat left at butchering time. Some skim milk may also be fed to advantage, and will help greatly in egg production. The amount given should be small at first, and then increased gradually until the flock has all they will drink up clean each day.

As much poultry feed as possible should be grown on the farm, but additional feeds may be bought as necessary, such as bran, middlings, gluten meal or beef scraps. If farmers would use the same judgment in feeding their poultry as they use in feeding their dairy cows, they would soon find the results quite satisfactory.

LONELY GIRL A NECESSITY

Has Many Qualities That Make Her More Popular Than Her Beautiful Sister.

In these days the homely girl is an absolute necessity, for she is like a cooling, quieting draft.

She comforts tired workers on their return from the whirl of busy towns; she can make a humble home—or a mansion—a place of happiness.

Her simplicity is her greatest charm. She pursues neither ambition nor ideals, but confines herself to the essentially useful things of life. Man, under her benign sway, becomes again as a little child; he drops the world for a time, and revels in the delight of domesticity, and returns again to the fray like a giant refreshed.

All her arts, too, are simple, easily fathomed; she practices no deep-laid wiles; yet she is a final and all-powerful factor in human affairs. The very directness of her purpose gains her end.

The "homely girl" is seen at her best, of course, in the home, smiling happily and wearing a big apron. She dusts and cooks with quiet enthusiasm and manages her household as if it were an important principality. Her cooking, be it whispered, is divine, and thus she claims reverent admiration from many masculine minds.

Her work seems a genuine delight to her. She toils with a merry heart, and, when the time comes for play, she disports herself with an equally simple and delightful pleasure. Artificiality shrinks from her presence.

As a wife, the "homely girl" is, let it be known, pre-eminent. She wraps her heart and soul around home and husband. No detail is too small for her ardent attention.—Philadelphia Press.

The Secret of Youth

Do you ever wonder how you can remain young, or why other women older than you, look younger than you do? The secret can be put in a few words: "Preserve your health, and you will preserve your youth."

By "health" we mean not alone physical health, but nerve health, as, sometimes, magnificently strong-looking women are nervous wrecks.

But whether you are weak physically or nervously, you need a tonic, and the best tonic for you is Cardui.

It builds strength for the physical and nervous systems. It helps put flesh on your bones and vitality into your nerves.

"My mother," writes Mrs. Z. L. Adcock, of Smithville, Tenn., "is 44 years old and is passing through the change of life.

"She was irregular and bloated and suffered terribly. My father stepped over to the store and got her a bottle of Cardui, which she took according to directions and now she is up, able to do her housework and says she feels like a new woman." Try Cardui in your own case.

Mr. F. M. Connell announces his withdrawal from the race for the Sheriff's office, leaving the to his four competitors.

CHIEF JUSTICE T. S. DOWDELL.

With pleasure we allude to the candidacy of the learned judge for renomination to the high office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

Judge Dowdell, outside of his reputation as a State officer, is well known to the voter of Chilton county, he having served as judge of the circuit as well as Chandler of the district, and making an enviable record in both capacities As chief justice he has fully discharged the duties of the office and with enlarged experience may be relied upon to rgain give entire satisfaction. A vote for Judge Dowdell is a good vote.

Another new paper made its appearance last week. Like the Record it boasts it has "come to stay" and perhaps it may grow to the great age of the Record, which lived five weeks, mainly on the Governor's proclamation. O, yes, it is printed in Birmingham, of course.

TO THE VOTERS OF ALABAMA

It gives me pleasure commend to the Democratic Voters of Alabama, the candidacy of Mr. M. C. Allgood, who has offered for State Auditor.

I have known Mr. Allgood for several years and have been impressed with his zealous ambition for the State of Alabama, especially along agricultural lines. For some years, he has been Superintendent of the Swine Department of the Alabama State Fair and each year has given much time and thought to this work, without compensation.

During my administration as President of that organization, I had occasion to call upon Mr. Allgood frequently for advise and assistance in regard to the agricultural feature of the Fair. He was always prompt and helpful. In the management of his department of the association, he gave general satisfaction to every exhibitor on account of his uniform fairness and courtesy.

I feel sure Mr. Allgood will serve the State well as Auditor should he be elected. From expressions I have heard in this county, I am sure he will carry Jefferson easily.

Yours very truly,
C. W. Ufford.

POINTS REGARDING THE CENSUS.

The census begins April 15 and must be completed in two weeks in cities and in thirty days in all other areas.

The enumerators will wear a badge inscribed "United States Census, 1910"

The law requires every adult person to furnish the prescribed information, but also provides that it shall be treated confidentially, so that no injury can come to any person from answering the questions.

The President has issued a proclamation, calling on all citizens to cooperate with the Census and assuring them that it has nothing to do with taxation, army or jury service, compulsory school attendance, regulation of immigration, or enforcement of any law, and that no one can be injured by answering the inquiries.

It is of the utmost importance that the census of population and agriculture in this state be complete and correct.

Therefore every person should promptly, accurately, and completely answer the Census questions asked by the enumerators.

IS IT POSSIBLE

that the people of Alabama believe in perpetuation in office and that a new senator cannot accomplish as much as an old one?

From Bessemer Daily Times.

According to press dispatches, Hon. Leroy Percy, the new Senator from Mississippi, has been given the same places on committees as his predecessor, Senator McLaurin held. Is it possible? Leroy Percy is an absolute stranger even to politics, much less the office he is holding, and we have been told by a few of the adherents of Senator Bankhead that "it is impossible for a new man to take the same place on committees as his predecessor." After all, isn't such an argument all rot? Senator Daniel, of Virginia, as at the point of death, and should he be taken away, is the sun to cease to shine on that grand old state? Has she a lack of sons who will fill his place? Is Mississippi to suffer because Mr. Percy is a new Senator? In other words, is the National Government a school in which public servants are only allowed to serve as they grow older, or is it a legislative body where every State must be recognized through its representative?

The senatorial toga is in Alabama, at least, a gift of the people, and they are the ones who are to say who shall wear it. The people of Alabama will choose between three men, regardless of any claim by their respective friends. Two of these aspirants have been in the limelight of Alabama politics for many years, and the other man, whose platform, strong personality and convictions, raise him above the mire of political intrigue and elevate him to a higher plane of statesmanship, namely Capt. Frank S. White, of Jefferson. The day has passed when any man in public office can claim priority over his opponents. It is idiotic, almost, to suppose that the people of Alabama are going to concede to any man the right of perpetuation in office. It is no longer the man altogether, but for what he stands.

In the present senatorial race, it is conceded that in the matter of local interests, Alabama is safe. Her position in the industrial world is sufficient to secure from Uncle Sam necessary appropriations. As for the rest, Capt. Frank S. White has made his position so clear and lucid that a child can understand it. He is against the monopolies which are crushing the poor and middle classes; he is against the stock gambling system which keeps down the farmer; he is against the tariff on the necessities of life, which is directly responsible for the present high cost of living; he is for good roads; good waterways; good citizenship; good government, and last, but not least, for the masses who need protection, instead of for the classes who have demonstrated too clearly that they are able of taking care of themselves, and who, at the same time, have been protected by the congressmen and senators, republicans and democrats, who voted for the upward revision of the tariff. Therefore, cast your vote for Frank S White for United States Senator, for he will stand flat footed upon his platform and the platform of the Democratic party.

City and Country Children.

According to William S. Sadler, M. D., a well-known Chicago physician, the child that is reared in a suburban town is much better off as regards health, morals and happiness than is his city cousin. In the course of a strong paper in on "Suburban Life," Dr. Sadler says: "Next to pure air there is probably no single influence so mightily influencing child growth and health as sunlight. Children are just as dependent upon sunlight for health and growth as are plants, and lack of sunshine unerringly produces both plants and babies which are pale, sickly and emaciated. It is the glorious sunshine that paints the bloom of health upon the cheeks of both the bud and the babe. The vital resistance of babies and children against disease is largely proportional to the amount of time they are able to spend out of doors in the sunshine."

Odd Freak of Conscience.

In one corner of the customers' room of a brokerage concern in the New York Wall street district, are a coat rack, an umbrella stand and a water cooler. The office boy discovered when the room was full of anxious customers and blue with tobacco smoke a silk umbrella, on the stand, to which a sealed envelope addressed "To the Oowner" was attached with a piece of pink twine. The owner was found leaning over the ticker and was glad to receive his umbrella, which he had given up for lost. The note read: "It was raining like ——, you know. I could not resist the temptation. Thanks, awfully." All questions as to who had a lapse of consolence failed to disclose the secret, and the promise of a reward had no effect on the office boy, who declared that he did not know "who had been short of umbrellas and took the one in question to cover."

BIRMINGHAM'S BUSINESS MEN'S LEAGUE

OFFERS PRIZES FOR NEWSPAPER ARTICLES.

The Business Men's League of Birmingham, in order to encourage a patriotic sentiment among the people of Alabama, in the growth of the Magic City, and its importance as a pleasure and trade metropolis, is offering prizes for the best articles published in daily and weekly newspapers in Alabama, outside of Jefferson County, on "Why Birmingham is the Natural and Logical Retail Center of the Northern Half of Alabama and Adjacent Territory."

Appreciating the importance and educational value that such a contest will be, the following prominent newspaper men of Birmingham have consented to act as Judges in the contest:

Wm Ryan, Managing Editor, The Age Herald,

R. F. Johnson, Managing Editor, The Ledger,

J. F. Hornaday, Associate Editor, The News.

Under authority of the Board of Directors of the Business Men's League, Frank P. Chadwick, Secretary of the League, is inviting the newspapers of Alabama to take part in this contest. The rules are very simple and are as follows:

1. The article must be written by a resident of the county in which the paper that it appears in is published.

2 The article must be published at least once in some paper, daily or weekly, in the county in which the writer of the article resides.

3. The writer of the article may be a member of the staff of the paper in which the article appears.

4. This contest is open only to articles appearing in daily or weekly newspapers published in Alabama, outside of Jefferson County.

5. The articles must not be less than 500 or more than 1000 words.

6. A copy of the paper in which the article appears must be mailed to the Business Men's League, 220 Chamber of Commerce Building, Birmingham, Alabama

7. No paper or writer is limited to any one article; as many articles can be written and published as desired.

8. No article entered for this contest can be awarded more than one prize.

9. This contest opens April 1st and closes July 31, 1910. All articles to be in by August 1, 1910.

10. The general excellence of the article, and the most convincing reasons "Why Birmingham is the Logical Trade Center of Northern Alabama" will receive the greatest weight in making awards of prizes.

The prizes are are as follows:

1. For the best article as above $50.00 in cash.

2. For the second best article as above $25.00.

3. For the third best article as above $15 00.

4. For the fourth best article as above $10 00.

Checks for the amounts awarded to be mailed to prize winners within twenty-four hours after the judges have made their awards. Judges to make awards by August 5, 1910.

For the information of those entering this contest, it is suggested that the following topics be treated:

Birmingham's geographical location; it's accessability as a railroad center, the advantage of special and week end railroad rates to the City; it's metropolitan stores and varied stocks of goods; it's splendid amusement attractions; it's splendid schools, and the educational value afforded by Birmingham as a center of industry and culture to those visiting the City for shopping purposes; the refund of railroad fares by merchants to out-of-town shoppers. Also it's advantages as a Convention City.

Good Joke on Voter.

An amusing story is told of what happened to a pluralist voter in the 1900 election in England. He was a keen politician and believing that the vote he possessed in a distant constituency would be of value to his candidate engaged a special train to take him there. On entering the polling booth he found the engineer of the train at his heels. He then discovered that the engineer happened to be on the voting register of the same town and was taking the opportunity of his accidental presence there to record his vote—which was given for the other side.

Are You Honest?

With your land when for the sake of saving a few dollars you use a fertilizer whose only recommendation is its analysis. It requires no special knowledge to mix materials to analyses. The value of a fertilizer lies in the materials used, so as not to over feed the plant at one time and starve at another. This is why Royster brands are so popular. Every ingredient has its particular work to do. Twenty-five years experience in making goods for Southern crops has enabled us to know what is required.

MR. SIMPSON, EXTINCT

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright, 1910 by Associated Literary Press.)

It all happened last summer at the Zeta Beta house party. Zeta Beta—at least in its own estimation—is the most influential and exclusive society in college, and they usually do things in the most conventional and approved manner. But even Zeta Betas can't always control their husbands. So when Grace Curtis, the only married girl in the party, got word that he had engaged passage for Europe for them on the following Saturday, she had to pack up and leave.

She must have spent a week's pin-money before she left, on long distance messages, trying to get one of the married graduates to take her place. But they had all made their plans for the week-end, and, of course, they couldn't break them—their husbands wouldn't let them.

"Well," said Grace, after she had argued in vain with the last married girl on the list, "there's nothing more to be done. We can't have anyone who isn't a Zeta Beta for a chaperon; that's against the by-laws. You girls certainly can't stay down here over Sunday without one. If only those boys weren't coming down Friday night! Don't you suppose you could exist without them just this once?"

No one approved of the plan.

"I've a fine idea," suggested Edna Newman, sophomore. "Nathalie Turner is coming down this morning; she is a little older than we are. We can fix her up and call her Mrs. Brown or Mrs. Simpson, or something, and she can take your place. I'm sure she won't object, for she hasn't asked a man down, and she certainly looks old enough to be married."

"O, we never could do that," said Grace, decidedly. "Supposing it leaked out?"

"How could it?" protested an eager senior. "None of the men know Nathalie, and we certainly won't tell."

"Here comes Nathalie! Let her decide!" And the girls hurried out to meet the newcomer.

Before Nathalie was fairly off the carriage steps she had been seized in a collective embrace and escorted, breathless and laughing, in the veranda.

"Well," she said, after the plan had been explained by a half dozen girls at once, "I'll do my best, if you girls promise to make it easy for me. All I need is a wedding ring and another name. Here," she drew a seal ring from her finger, "some of you girls go down and get a wedding ring at the little jewelry shop in the village."

"It's a Queer Thing Her Husband Didn't Come with Her."

Edna Newman, as originator of the plan, volunteered her services, and, with the enthusiastic senior who had upheld her, she started down towards the village.

"I'm perfectly crazy to meet your brother," said the enthusiastic senior. "I've heard so much about him."

"I wish I hadn't asked him," said Edna, regretfully. "He used to be fairly entertaining, but now he's as unresponsive as a stone wall."

"Oh, I like unresponsive men!" said the senior.

"Don't get up your expectations about Peter. Ever since he met that girl last summer he hasn't even looked at any of my friends. He didn't want to come down here at all."

"What girl?" urged the senior.

"Why he met a girl on a train going to the mountains. And then afterward he happened to see her at one of the hotels in New York."

"Is he really in love?" suggested the senior.

"To be sure he is; hopelessly so, too, because he doesn't know her name and he hasn't any idea of where she lives or anything."

During the first few minutes of introductions and greetings that night the girls were fortunately too much interested in themselves to notice Nathalie's rather unchaperonly behavior.

Edna was trying to introduce her brother, when she saw him making for Nathalie as fast as he could. Grace followed and saw him speak. Then she looked at Nathalie and saw her blush and turn her head away.

"Oh, Peter," said Edna, "have you met Mrs. Simpson? She's our chaperon."

"Oh!" gasped Peter, unable to conceal his surprise.

"I am so glad to see you, Mr. Newman," Nathalie said in quite a matronly manner. "It was delightful of you to come."

Then Edna led the dazed Peter off to meet the other girls and she forgot all about his embarrassment until after dinner.

Just before the dancing began he came up to her and asked her how long Mrs. Simpson had been married.

"Oh, some time," said Grace, without looking at him. She was afraid her look would betray the secret.

"It's a queer thing her husband didn't come with her," he said, with ill-concealed disapproval.

After he had danced three or four dances he came to his sister again. "You know I have to catch a train to town to-night," he said.

Edna was completely surprised. "Well, I don't know whether we can manage that," she said. "But, anyway, you must apologize to our chaperon. It looks a little rude to leave so soon."

Peter tried to object, but Edna led him to the piano, where Nathalie sat playing dance music.

"Oh!" exclaimed Nathalie, looking up at Peter, "you surely can't have grown tired of us so soon. I'm afraid it will rather spoil the girls' fun to-morrow. I know you will enjoy it."

"It would be quite impossible for me to enjoy it—now," said Peter, with a keen glance at Nathalie that made her drop her eyes and fumble with the piano keys.

"Pet!" exclaimed Edna. "Why, we aren't ever going to tell."

"Oh, is it to be such a secret as that? Aren't you ever going to tell anyone, not even—your brother?"

"Oh, my no!" Then remembering Peter's embarrassment when he met Nathalie, Edna said: "Why, do you think Peter is on in any way?"

Nathalie shook her head. "The trouble is that he had known me slightly before, and that makes it rather embarassing."

"Did you know Peter? Why didn't you tell me?"

"Well, I didn't know who he was," Nathalie admitted. "You see, we had just seen each other on the train going to the mountains—"

"Oh-h!" gasped Edna, and then the two girls looked at each other and laughed.

It must have been Nathalie's voice that brought him. He came strolling along, looking blankly enough, out at the water.

"Oh, Peter!" Edna called, and when he had come over to them she continued, "Nathalie and I have a secret. Can you keep it?"

"To be sure," he said, trying not to notice Nathalie's appealing glance.

"It's about Nathalie's husband, Mr. Simpson. You remember you asked about him? Well, he's quite fictitious. Our real chaperon left unexpectedly—" but Peter needed no further explanation.

"It's about Nathalie's ring as a souvenir," suggested the enthusiastic senior, the next day after the boys had gone back to the city. "And then the first girl who is married to any of the men who were down here, must wear it at her wedding. You don't want it, do you, Nathalie?"

"That's not a bad idea at all," said Nathalie with a mystifying smile. "It really fits me perfectly. I'll wear it."

OWED FREEDOM TO BARBER

Many Culprits Indebted to Knight of the Razor for Restoration to Liberty.

Recently a barber emptied an Illinois county jail. The prisoners didn't saw or tunnel their way to liberty, nor did they overpower the guard and make a break for freedom. They simply flirted successfully with the prosecutor, the judge and the jury.

One of the prisoners was a barber, and he picked up odd dimes and quarters by shaving and cropping his fellow unfortunates behind the bars. When Circuit court opened each prisoner went to the bar looking neat and trim with clean shaves and carefully cropped locks. Such good impressions did they make on the jury that many of the jurors could not be made to believe that such a good looking chap would commit the offense for the commission of which he was being tried.

So many of the men got clear that the prosecuting attorney set up an objection to the barber being permitted to ply his trade in the jail. He claimed that the blind goddess was peeking under her bandage and noting the innocent appearing faces of the prisoners at the bar, they were being freed to the confusion of law and order, but the court decided that it was the privilege of a defendant to perk up if he so desired and had the price, no matter if the result was that a man looked better than he really is inclined to be.

The result was that the barber kept on working his razor and his shears until he had cleared out the jail and had given each of a score of men another chance, including himself.

A Mistress of Detail.

Dr. Robert Wood, of Johns Hopkins university, was complimented by a young lady, at a dinner in Baltimore, on the artificial mirages that he had succeeded in making in his laboratory.

"It is by attention to the least details," said Doctor Wood, with a smile, "that one succeeds in experiments of this kind. One must look after details like—er—like a landlord's wife.

"'Tommy,' said the landlord's wife to her little boy who is that talking on the doorstep to your father?'

"'It's a divinity student,' Tommy answered, 'who is looking for a furnished room.'

"'Hurry, then,' said the mother, 'and walk up and down the hall whistling a hymn.'"

METHOD OF CURING CLOVER

Practice of Maine Agricultural Experiment Station in Caring for Hay Crop with Little Waste.

(BY PROF. G. W. GOWELL.)

The practice of the Maine agricultural experiment station in curing clover is to mow it when there is a prospect of dry weather for a couple of days and when it is free from water or dew and let it lie as cut that day, or, if it has wilted somewhat on the surface, turn it by hand or tedder just before night.

If not turned the first afternoon it is turned or teddered the second day and again toward noon.

In the afternoon of the second day it is put into cocks about five feet high. Ordinarily it is wilted at this time, but if the weather has turned dark or the clover is very heavy, portions of it are liable to be unwilted, in which case the cocks are made smaller.

The cocks are made by using small forkfuls flattened out so that it will come off in layers when handled again.

As it cures it settles, and unless the cocks are high in proportion to their width they will flatten out, which is wrong.

The walls are kept perpendicular three-fourths of the way up and then gradually drawn in. Much time need not be consumed in making the bunches, as it is quickly done.

One condition is imperative—the clover must go into the cock free from rain or dew. It can be safely cocked when containing lots of water from its own juices, but not when even a little moist from water.

We allow it to stand in cocks three or four days, or longer, before disturbing it. On a day in which the air is dry we open up the bunches so that the air can draw through them, and usually after about two hours' exposure the hay is ready to draw to the barn. It is not necessary to tear it apart and wear it out, as it readily parts with its own moisture, which is chiefly near the center and the bottom of the bunches.

If rain falls while the clover is in the bunch it does not wet it deeply after the bunches have been made for a few hours. When rain comes we let the bunches alone and the water dries out of itself when sound weather comes again.

To successfully cure clover or other fodder plants in this way it is essential to let the cocks alone and allow them to cure and dry out undisturbed.

Clover thus cured and aired out just before putting into the barn does not burn in the mow or come out dusty. In midwinter a handful from the mow can be twisted into a knot without breaking the stocks or wringing off the leaves.

We also cure green oats and peas in the same way. Out of 32 tons weighed into the barn one year and fed out in winter all of the oats made from it by the cattle were collected and saved in one stack.

This method of curing succeeds in ordinary weather. Of course heavy, prolonged rains mean defeat to this or any system unless the bunches are covered with cloth or fiber caps.

National Bank Reserves.

The law requires every national bank located in the three central cities, New York, Chicago and St. Louis, to maintain a reserve in bank of 25 per cent.; the same rate is required for other reserve city banks, but one-half of the amount may be deposited to their credit with correspondents in central reserve cities. Country banks are required to maintain a 15 per cent. reserve, two-fifths of which must be in bank and three-fifths may be with correspondents.

Your tongue is coated.
Your breath is foul.
Headaches come and go.

These symptoms show that your stomach is the trouble. To remove the cause is the first thing, and Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets will do that. Easy to take and most effective. Sold by all druggists.

Laxative for Women Free

There is a great difference in the purposes to which a laxative should be put. Tablets and pills, salts, etc., are usually violent purgatives or cathartics, and altogether too powerful for the average person.

A woman at all times needs only a mild laxative—in fact, none other is needed by anyone, weak or strong though they may be, for the object is simply to move the bowels, and if a gentle laxative will do it, what is the use of a violent one?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has earned a well-deserved vogue among women and children and old folks—people who must necessarily be careful of what they take.

It is a liquid laxative tonic and admittedly the greatest stomach, liver and bowel remedy before the American people. The price is only 50 cents or $1 a bottle, as it comes in both sizes, and all druggists sell it. Its pleasant taste and gentle action make it an ideal remedy for women in constipation, torpid liver, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn and such like digestive complaints. Its use for a short time will remove the trouble entirely so that future medication will be unnecessary. Its tonic properties build up the stomach and intestinal muscles so that they act naturally again. That this is so is the experience of many heads of families, like Mrs. Brannan, of Alvarado, Va., Mrs. K. L. Stout, of Louisville, Ky., and numerous others; in fact, way out in Williams, Cal., as Mrs. J. E. Blackmore, of that place, writes, the whole town seems to be using it.

If the remedy is new to you and you want to make a trial of it before buying, send your name to the doctor's address as below and a free test bottle will be sent you. Then, if results are satisfactory you can buy it of your druggist.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

UNIQUE IDEA FOR GATEPOST

Constructed of Stones, Each One of Which Represents a Friend of the Owner

"Unique and interesting adornments to a suburban home are the entrance posts leading to Cheerynook, a bungalow on Long island," said the returned visitor. The low stone dike which surrounds the property is terminated by two huge pillars, which seem to welcome the coming guest. Each stone in this gate post represents a friend of the owner. While the dike was being built I was invited out to spend the week end. I was taken down to a heap of bowlders in the back garden and asked to make a selection. After that my host took me to his toolroom, where, with instruments of all sizes, I was requested to carve my name, the date and place of birth on the stone. I was invited out again last week and found that all the carved bowlders from various friends had been set into the gate posts, and I must say they have formed a truly interesting monument to friendship."

Excitement.

"People do not pay as much attention to studied oratory as they used to," said one statesman.

"No," replied the other, "in modern legislation studied oratory is frequently less exciting than the roll call."

Matters of Especial Moment to the Progressive Agriculturist

One man's hobby is another man's nightmare.

The farm today has many things that a generation ago were unknown.

A maiden sometimes gives a man the mitten when his trouble is cold feet.

If you do not propose to stick to the resolutions you make it were better that you don't make them.

The farmer of the past tried to cultivate more land. The farmer of today tries to cultivate less, but better.

Antiquated ideas of selfishness are being buried with the dead bones of the past. Ignorance is fleeing before intelligence.

There is some truth in the saying that it is hard for a person with a sunny disposition to lay up any money for a rainy day.

A man need not expect to have good neighbors unless he is a good neighbor himself. It is another application of the Golden Rule.

The ice man and the coal man are smiling and not saying a word against having an old-fashioned winter. The farmer, as usual, says nothing—just saws wood.

There are some farmers who seem to take more interest in the imports and exports of the United States than they do in the imports and exports of their own farms.

Have you thought of the poor family over the way? How would it do to take a nice basket of good things to eat over and watch them enjoy it? Such things tend to make lasting friends.

The success of the farmer depends upon balanced character, love of the earth and of life in the open, knowledge of his farm and the ability to make some scientific applications, practical experience, a grasp of market conditions, sound relations with railroads, aggressiveness in planning, and good business methods, more than upon expertness in craftsmanship.

FARMER BELIEVES IN EQUITY

Does Not Believe in Any Great Increase in Officers' Salaries at Present Time.

It grieves me sore to see so many farmers and brothers so negligent of their own interest and so unwilling to pay dues and assessments, writes J. Burcham, secretary of Rock Springs local union of Appleton, Ark., in Co-operation. Then we look again and we see some things that aren't just to my fancy, but I am ready to confess that I don't know it all, but we are based on equity, justice and the Golden Rule. Now, dear brothers, I can't see any equity in the great increase in our officers' salaries, while we have to hoe and dig so hard to make ends meet. Then again, I don't see any justice in a pension to one union widow and all the rest go blank. Now I have all reverence for Brother Green-am that could possibly be due from one brother to another, and his widow, but I can't see how it could be just to give her a nice little yearly income and leave out so many good sisters that are widows of as true union blood as ever lived, but didn't happen to be the originator of the order, but after it was founded has yielded their lives in its defense, and, like good soldiers, have fallen at their post and shouted "victory" as they went down, and left thier wives to go through this world as best they could now, brethren, I am in favor of anything or move that is in the shape of justice and right, but I am not in favor of helping one and letting others bare and giving officers increased salaries to the exclusion of helping any. Now I believe in our obedience to the demands of our high tribunals when they act on the principles of our beloved order, but they should act for the whole and not a favored few. I am sure they were honest, but through sympathy they overleaped their bounds. However, it is a law now and in full force, so let us be true and never falter. We should profit by our mistakes, but let us not make such a mistake again, for it has been one of the worst that has been made and has put a damper on the order that will be years to turn off. Now, brothers, let us be true and never look back, nor ever lose sight of the principles of our beloved order. We have gone through an awful ordeal and not quite out yet, but have reached the top of the hill and have a down-hill pull now, we only pull together. So take courage, be loyal and raise your living at home.

A man need not expect to have good neighbors unless he is a good neighbor himself. It is another application of the Golden Rule.

The ice man and the coal man are smiling and not saying a word against having an old-fashioned winter. The farmer, as usual, says nothing—just saws wood.

There are some farmers who seem to take more interest in the imports and exports of the United States than they do in the imports and exports of their own farms.

Have you thought of the poor family over the way? How would it do to take a nice basket of good things to eat over and watch them enjoy it? Such things tend to make lasting friends.

The success of the farmer depends upon balanced character, love of the earth and of life in the open, knowledge of his farm and the ability to make some scientific applications, practical experience, a grasp of market conditions, sound relations with railroads, aggressiveness in planning, and good business methods, more than upon expertness in craftsmanship.

FARMER BELIEVES IN EQUITY

Does Not Believe in Any Great Increase in Officers' Salaries at Present Time.

It grieves me sore to see so many farmers and brothers so negligent of their own interest and so unwilling to pay dues and assessments, writes J. R. Barcham, secretary of Rock Springs local union of Appleton, Ark., in Co-Operation. Then we look again and we see some things that aren't just to my fancy, but I am ready to confess that I don't know it all, but we are based on equity, justice and the Golden Rule. Now, dear brothers, I can't see any equity in the great increase of our officers' salaries, while we have to hoe and dig so hard to make ends meet. Then again, I don't see any justice in a pension to one union widow and all the rest go blank. Now I have all reverence for Brother Gresham that could possibly be due from one brother to another, and his widow, but I can't see how it could be just right to give her a nice little yearly income and leave out so many good sisters that are widows of as true union blood as ever lived, but didn't happen to be the originator of the order, but after it was founded hazarded their lives in its defense, and, like good soldiers, have fallen at their post and shouted "victory" as they went down, and left thier wives to go through this world as best they could. Now brethren, I am in favor of anything or move that is in the shape of justice and right, but I am not in favor of helping one and letting others go bare and giving officers increased salaries to the exclusion of helping any. Now I believe in our obedience to the demands of our high tribunals when they act on the principles of our beloved order, but they should act for the whole and not a favored few. I am sure they were honest, but through sympathy they overleaped their bounds. However, it is a law now and in full force, so let us be true and never falter. We should profit by our mistakes, but let us not make such a mistake again, for it has been one of the worst that has been made and has put a damper on the order that will take years to turn off. Now, brothers, let us be true and never look back, nor never lose sight of the principles of our beloved order. We have gone through an awful ordeal and not quite out yet, but have reached the top of the hill and have a down-hill pull now, if we only pull together. So take courage, be loyal and raise your living at home.

The Question of John the Baptist

Sunday School Lesson for April 17, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 11:1-19. Memory verses, 4-6.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"But the witness which I have is greater than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to accomplish, the very works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me."—John 5:36.

TIME.—Perhaps in the summer of A. D. 28, before our last lesson.

PLACE.—Jesus was somewhere in Galilee. According to Luke he had just raised the son of the widow at Nain. John the Baptist was in prison at Castle Machaerus, on the east of the Dead sea.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

Christ's Answer to Honest Doubt.—Who was this doubter, this John the Baptist? He was the last man in the world one might have expected to entertain doubts regarding Jesus. He was his cousin according to the flesh, born only a short time before our Lord. He was brought up as a Nazarite like Samson and Samuel, and his pure and simple life gave him fine insight into spiritual matters.

II. The Doubt.—Vs. 1-3. Under what circumstances did John begin to doubt the Messiahship of Jesus? He had been cast into prison as a punishment for his bold condemnation of the sin of Herod Antipas. Herod had sent away his own wife and had persuaded his brother's wife to become his.

What was the sensible course that John took to rid himself of doubt? He sent directly to Jesus by "two of his disciples," who had remained faithful to him in all his trials. The message was, "Art thou he that should come," a common and well-understood description of the Messiah,—"or do we look for another?"

Illustration. "A weaver who had an elaborate piece of tapestry hung it, stretched upon the tenter-hooks, in his yard. That night it was stolen. A piece of tapestry was found by the officers which seemed to answer the description, but as the pattern was not unlike that of other fabrics, there must be definite proof. It was brought to the weaver's yard and there the perforations in the fabric were found to correspond precisely to the tenter-hooks. This was demonstration. In like manner if we place the life and character of Jesus over against all the prophecies of Messiah in Scripture, in the sacred books of the false religions, and in the universal longings of the race, we shall find that there is a perfect correspondence point by point."—David James Farrell, D. D. LL. D.

Christ's Answer to the Doubt.—Vs. 4-6. Luke tells us (Luke 7:21) that when John's message was delivered Christ proceeded at once to work many miracles of healing, including the cure of demoniacs and of the blind. Not until he had done this did he give the messengers his reply.

Christ gave two credentials of his Messiahship; what was the first? His miracles, the undoubted fact that "the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up."

With what significant exhortation did Jesus close his message to John? "Blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me."

Christ's Estimate of the Honest Doubter.—Vs. 7-15. Why did our Lord, as soon as John's messengers departed, tell the crowd what he thought of John? Because they might think that John's question implied a weakness in him at which Christ would be offended. As John had exalted Jesus, so Jesus would exalt John.

Christ's "Estimate of Dishonest Doubters.—Vs. 16-19. John was ready to receive Jesus, as soon as his mind could be convinced; that is, he was an honest doubter. Christ now turns severely upon a set of men, the Pharisees and lawyers (Luke 7:30), who showed plainly that they were dishonest doubters, being unwilling to receive the truth no matter how much evidence was given them.

To what does he compare them? To children playing in the market-places at marriages and funerals, trifling with the greatest things of life. Some are pretending to play the flute, like the hired musicians that headed the wedding processions followed by other children will not join in the piping or the wailing at the right times to please them. These last, of course, are Jesus and John.

To what comforting conclusion did Christ come? That wisdom—the Truth of which he was an incarnation—is justified, approved, accepted, by her children, even though all the children of the evil one reject her. "Their hearts are in unison with the gospel harp; when Christ's minister strikes its golden strings their feelings vibrate to every touch; they can accompany him through its whole compass of sound, from the low notes of pious grief and penitential sorrow up to the high thrilling tones of enraptured gratitude, love, and praise."—Edward Payson.

Be not anxious about little things, if thou wouldst learn to trust God with thine all. Act upon faith in little things; commit thy daily cares and anxieties to him, and he will strengthen thy faith for greater trials that may come.—Dr. Pusey.

Contentment comes neither by culture nor by wishing; it is a reconciliation with one's lot, growing out of an inward superiority to our surroundings.—J. K. McLean.

"SETTLER" FOR THE ORATOR

Boy's Question Ended the Speechmaking, and Almost Put Stop to Banquet.

Daniel H. Grady, the brilliant young Portage lawyer, comes to Milwaukee almost every week and usually has at least one new story to tell, says the Free Press of that city. This is the last one Mr. Grady passed out for the delectation of a group of Democratic politicians.

Col. "Jim" Burke of Mauston, was an enthusiastic Irishman, and an orator who believed in using "the floor" as long as he could keep it on the rare occasions when his fellow townsmen permitted him to make a speech. The colonel responded to the toast, "The Emerald Isle" at a big St. Patrick's day banquet some years ago, and he made good his ancient reputation as a long-distance talker. After recalling the history of Ireland during all the distressful centuries with close attention to details, the speaker paused for breath. The audience was glad of the respite.

"And now I've told ye a few of the great evints of the glorious history of the ould sod," said the colonel, mopping his brow. "Is there anny wan who wishes to ask anny questions?"

A little lad at the far end of the room stood up timidly.

"If Oi'm not out of ahrder," he piped shrilly; "if Oi'm not out of ahrder, Oi'd loike to ask just wan question."

"Very well," said the colonel, "I'd be happy to answer if I can."

"Well, thin," said the lad, "would yez be so kind as to tell me what toime o' the night or the marnin' it is?" said the lad.

The band struck up the "Wearin' o' the Green" to head off the incipient riot.

BETTER THAN GOLDEN EGGS

Figures Prove That Product of Prize Hen Was Far Greater Than That from Fabled Goose.

Recently a hen was exhibited at Wilkesbarre, Pa., and took all the prizes as the best of her kind. So important did she grow in the estimation of the holders that her owner was offered $10,000 for her but refused it. At about this time the hen laid an egg and, that it might be evident that she was a producer as well as a show bird, her owner allowed the product of her labor to remain in the pen with her. This was a tactical blunder, for the egg was purloined shortly and has not been seen since.

Now there is a well-known story to the effect that a goose of the dim and distant past once laid a golden egg. Taking it that the historian was sure of his facts, this goose of fame has no such claim upon renown as has the Wilkesbarre hen. Here is a bag of gold containing $10,000 in the treasury at Washington which visitors are allowed to lift to get the idea of just how heavy that much money is. It weighs something like thirty pounds. Now, if the egg of this hen, with the prospect of being hatched into a creature as valuable as the parent, is estimated as being worth one-tenth as much as she is, the stolen egg would be worth $1,000—which amount of money would weigh three pounds or as much as two dozen eggs. So the egg of the Pennsylvania hen is worth 24 times as much as the greatly-touted goose egg and deserves fame in accordance.

Big Turtle Caught with a Light Rod.

L. L. Betts, John Miller and H. J. Saxon made one of the most remarkable fishing catches yesterday ever recorded. The gentlemen went out on the yacht La Poupee and while trolling about Mr. Betts hooked into a 150-pound loggerhead turtle.

The monster put up a game fight and for fully two hours it was nip and tuck between turtle and man, but the man triumphed, as nearly always he does, and his turtleship was hauled aboard and brought to port. The capture of the turtle is remarkable, first, because they seldom take a hook, and second, because Mr. Betts had only a light rod and reel and slender tackle and was not prepared to undertake such a "killing." It was skilled manipulation of the reel more than anything else that made the capture of the turtle possible.—Miami News-Record.

"The Old Man in the Belfry" Is Dead.

John Denham, known for many years as the "old man of the belfry," and for 40 years elder and trustee of the Church of the Sea and Land, is dead. He was a familiar figure on the East Side, and his time was solely devoted to the amelioration of the lot of the poor. Mr. Denham was born in Scotland in 1826, and came to New York in 1860, working for many years thereafter as a tailor. He became elder and trustee of the church, and when he retired from business, fifteen years ago, he took up his residence in the belfry of the building, so that he might be near the needy persons in the neighborhood.—New York Post.

Table Rapping New Fad.

"What in the world is that noise?" asked a visitor as a continuous dull thumping sounded just over her head.

"That is the family above us," said the hostess. "They are interested in psychical research, and are making a table rap, as they often do of an evening. Yes, it is quite annoying, but they are good neighbors and we don't complain. The two daughters of the house are quite expert in this line and last week a society woman hired them to entertain her guests for an evening. They tell me it was a great success."

A Nice Calculation.

Two very dear old ladies walked up to the window where tickets were to be sold for two popular concerts. They wanted tickets for both nights, but alas! those for the second evening were all gone. This was the more popular entertainment of the two.

"I'm so sorry, my dear!" pattered one of the old ladies to the other. "We did want to go, didn't we, and we wanted to go both nights."

"You couldn't give us two tickets for each night?" inquired the other, of the clerk.

"No, ma'am."

"You haven't two seats anywhere for the second night?"

"No, ma'am. Couldn't give you nose room."

A great resolution beamed upon her gentle face.

"Then," said she firmly, "give me four tickets for the first night. We will make them do."

"Why, sister," quavered the other, "you going to invite somebody?"

"No," said she, "but if we can't go both nights—" She paused, bewildered, quite out of her calculation. Then a happy thought struck her, and she added, "We'll go twice the first night."—Youth's Companion.

Just Exchanged Flats.

"I heard an entirely new one to me the other day," said a man who hears all kinds of queer things in his business. "I was standing near the telephone booths at the Grand Central when a woman began to talk to a friend, apparently uptown. She said that a friend of hers was coming to New York in a few days and didn't want to go to a hotel.

"'I hear you are going to Chicago,' she said. 'Well, my friend has a nice flat on the Lake Drive and just like yours, with a good servant. Why don't you two swap. You take her flat while you are in Chicago and let her take yours.' 'And the uptown woman seemed delighted with the arrangement."—New York Sun.

Would Be More Popular.

If the ladies' tailors will make it the fashion for a woman to wear dresses she can put on without the help of her husband, the cook and a monkey-wrench, they will be popular with the fellows who pay the bills.—Washington Times.

In Memory Of A Loving Cousin.

On March 23rd, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Walker and sadened the home by taking from them their beloved daughter Kate. It is so hard to give her up but God knows what is best. He saw fit to call her to a heavenly home above. Everything was done that was in the peoples power to do for her, but nothing could be done to save her. She was taken sick on Friday evening about 3 o'clock and died Wednesday morning near 7 o'clock. Oh how poor Kate did suffer but she bore her suffering paitently. Kate leaves a father, mother, 4 brothers, 3 sisters and a host of friends to mourn her loss. We do not feel that we could speak a consoling word to the dear ones whose heart is broken with sadness. Weep not, dear ones, for our loss is heavens gain. Oh, it does look so sad to visit the home and not see dear Kate doing all her loving hands could do to make their home happy. Kate was such a sweet girl, none knew her but to love her. She always had a pleasant smile on her sweet face and everyone she met she had some kind and loving word to speak to them. Dear Kate can never come to us any more on this earth but we can go to her where there will be no more parting or sorrow come to us if we will only put our trust in God and obey His commandments. Kate was too sweet to face the troubles and trials of this earth Sleep on, dear Kate, and take thy rest. Kate's remains were laid to rest in Alpine graveyard, March 24th, the funeral services were held by Brother T. J. Denson.

She is sleeping, calmly sleeping,
In a new made grave today,
We are weeping, sadly weeping,
For our darling gone away;
One by one the gentle shepherd
Gathers lambs from every fold,
Folds them to His loving bosom
With a tenderness untold.
She is waiting, ever waiting,
For the friends she loved the best,
And she'll gladly hail their coming
To the mansions of the blest,
One by one the Lord will call us
As our labor here is done,
And then as we cross the river
We shall meet, yes, one by one.

Surprising Facts About the Patent Medicine Business

"The Fourth Estate" has been warning publishers about the risk in allowing credit to new medicine concerns. It is said that there have been only one or two of the thousands of new proprietary medicine houses have made any considerable money that have started the past twenty years and only a very few more that have met with even moderate success. It is the general impression that the business is immensely profitable while the facts are that there is a larger percentage of failures than in any other line. The new concerns usually start with lots of confidence in the merit of their goods and advertising but soon exhaust their capital leaving dealers who have stocked their medicines with unsalable goods on their shelves. It is the experience of many publishers that have accepted this new business that they been compelled to charge off their bills to profit and loss.

There are many old and reliable medicine houses that continue to do a good or increasing business from year to year but the new ones are finding it more and more difficult to become established.—DesMoines Capital.

Dropsy—
Given up by Doctor

"I had dropsy, and was told by my family physician that there was no chance for me. My family also gave me up. My limbs and body were swollen one-third larger than natural, water collected around my heart and I had to be propped up in bed to keep from smothering. I took Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy until I was entirely cured. This was in 1902, and I am now able to do any kind of work on my farm. My cure was certainly marvelous."

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not

The Climax Cotton Seed Cutter, now busily engaged at W. F. Maddox's shop, is a great help to the careful planter who loves to see a good stand of cotton. The cutter eliminates all the defective seed leaving only the strong and healthy seed to be planted, thus giving a fair start for the plant to grow.

A Montgomery afternoon paper says in big letters "Mallory is The Lead," and this reminds us of an old story. An Irishman at a race course, enamored of a certain horse which made an excellent start, exclaimed gleefully "See how he leads 'em, see how he leads 'em!" Presently as his favorite lost ground and was passed by his competitors, the Irishman, nothing daunted, cried "See how he drives 'em all before him?" And so it is with the gubernatorial race. Mallory made an excellent start a year ago, but, alas! he fell on the way and at the present time is being driven before the gallant O'Neal, who will certainly come in a winner on the 2nd day of May. "See how he drives 'em before him!"

The Hon. Scott Sayre, candidate for Judge of this circuit, was in town Monday, smiling pleasantly and hopeful for the result of the primary. His card bears the following inscription:

Spring, 1904—Nominated by large majority.
November, 1904—Elected for six years, 1905-1911.
June, 1905—Law creating Circuit declared void on a technicality.
January, 1907—At own expense, published notices of law to re-establish Circuit.
March, 1907—Procured passage by Legislature of law re establishing circuit.
March 7th, 1907—Petition by law for my appointment to office to which I had been elected.
March, 1907—Refused by Governor Comer. "He may suit the people, he may suit the lawyers, but I HAVE THE POWER, and he does not suit me."
May 2nd—Question. Shall the people rule?

On Saturday last a deluge of rain fell, and the wind was strong—very much like a day in March. As far as we have been able to learn no damage was done in this section, but reports from other places are disastrous. On Sunday and Monday the weather was much cooler, and from the north come reports of cold and freezing weather, doing much damage to growing crops.

Awin, a small village in the south-eastern corner of Wilcox county, is reported to have been the wiest Alabama sufferer from Saturday's storm, a report stating that at least one person was killed, and that it is believed there were a number of deaths. Practically every house in the village is said to have been wiped out. The population of Awin is about 100 persons. The storm was violent in many parts of the south and it is believed that there were many fatalities in various sections.

Judge W. W. Pearson was in Clanton Tuesday. He expresses confidence in his nomination in the primary and says he is well pleased with the outlook. The Judge expressed that the list of jurors drawn for the spring term of circuit court, which will be found in another column in this issue of The Banner, differs somewhat from the lists formerly published. The entire list of jurors as drawn by the Jury Commission is published, and from this list of names the grand and petit Juries will be drawn the morning that court convenes. Until that time none can tell who will serve on the grand jury or who will serve on the petit jurors. This is an improvement on the old style.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Clanton, April 18, 1910

To the Voters of Chilton County:

I desire to say to the voters of the county that in the short time before the primary it has been impossible for me to see them all individually. While I have made an active canvass of the county, yet I have been unable to call upon many of my friends, and take this means of assuring all of my sincere thanks for their unwavering support. I feel confident of securing the nomination, but hope that every Democrat will turn out to the polls on the 2d of May. Should I be elected Sheriff of the county in the November election I faithfully promise all to fill the office to the best of my ability.

Very respectfully,
LEE HAYES.

Summerfield, Ala., April 16, 1910

Editor Banner:—Please let me have a few words in the dear old Banner. I am no politician but since I see Mr. B. L. Jones has announced himself for sheriff I wish to say a few words. I think the people would do well to elect Mr Jones for sheriff. He is well known in the county, a man that will do his official duty, an upright gentleman, a man who looks after Mr. Jones business and give no man or community any trouble. I don't think the people will make any mistake by electing Mr. Jones for sheriff, and while he is elected for sheriff let us be sure to elect Mr. H. S. D. Mallory for governor, then the state will have a good governor and Chilton county will have a good sheriff. Mr. Mallory is a high type christian gentleman, he is a man without a blemish, for that reason he should be our next governor.

S. B. McCARY.

Maplesville, Ala., April 18, 1910.

Editor Banner:—We have one candidate in this part of the county for Sheriff, his name is Jones. I have known Mr. Jones for a long time, he is a high toned gentleman and worthy of the office which he seeks, he is going to carry this of the county nearly solid. I am sure he will carry Beats 3, 7 and 8; really, I believe he will be the nominee on the Democrat ticket. Come on, boys and let's have Jones for the next sheriff and Mallory for Governor, Deason for Judge. All who think that B. L. Jones will not carry this end of the county is mistaken, for he is going to get nearly all. With best wishes to all, and Jones for sheriff, that is what the people say over here. Mr. Editor please publish this, it has been a long time since I wrote any thing for the Banner. I just want the to know how my friend Jones will run in this end of the county.

Nebo.

Editor Banner:—I see so much rottenness in politics than I can not refrain from saying something. I noticed a communication some time ago from R. E. Roper advocating an honorable high tone campaign this year, but it seems that some ignore his pleadings. Now I do not think it right for one candidate to take advantage of another by circulating papers asking for signers, recommending any candidate on any basis.

If it can not be stated plainly and flatly that the candidate so recommended is a man of good moral character, and that it would be an honor to the county to have him elected to office. And another objection I have to the circulation of petitions is that people will sign papers unthoughtedly, not thinking of the effect it will have in various ways and some will sign just simply to keep from being bored by the man who circulates said papers. If I was an editor I would not publish these things unless it was written in box car letters that the candidate so recommended was a man of firm, political and moral character and had never played pig and puppy hunting for the biggest crowd in order to get office.

HONEST JOHN.

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space in your valuable paper to say a few words. Our Sunday school is progesssing nicely.

Mr. Lonie and Edd Hughes visited relatives and friends at Stanton last Saturday and Sunday.

The safe at the postoffice was blown about 2 a. m. last Saturday.

Henry Latham, who lives near the postoffice, heard a loud explosion. He rushed out, called the police and Dr. F. W. Crow, the postmaster.

As soon as the smoke from the explosion had disappeared enough for the men to make investigation, it was found that the safe had been blown with black powder, but the robber had failed to reach the money division, so nothing was lost.

The officers telephoned to Birmingham for the blood-hounds and every effort was made to find some clue to the bold attempt. So far nothing definite has been found.

COMET IS HARMLESS

When It Hits Will Make Pretty Show, But Do No Damage.

Peculiar Electrical Conditions May Be Looked For About the Middle of May—10th of May Date of Passage.

Washington.—Astronomers have fixed the 10th of May as the day of the passage of the earth through the tail of Halley's comet at which time the celestial visitor will be at its most brilliant period on its perihelion passage through the solar system.

Comets come and go, and while in the solar system assume various shapes of circles, knots, twists and sticky tails and then leave it one on the earth forever in doubt as whence they come and whither they go—a conclusion of the physicist and astronomer.

But this spring when the comet comes it will afford the rare chance, as the earth passes through its tail, of learning much in regard to comets and their accompanying phenomena. This will include distinctive markings as bright patches, streaks, straight and twisted, many and various shapes of tails and any other phenomena as may present itself to the observer.

In the passage of the earth through the tail of Halley's comet there will be a polarization of its light, light fluctuations, earth currents, which mean a marked change in the electrical condition of the atmosphere—auroreal displays may be expected for several days at the intersection of the earth with the material of the comet.

The color of the sun will be temporarily modified in the earth's passage through the tail. Twilight panoramas, luminous clouds, dust particles in the air and the apparent brilliancy of zodiacal light may be greater during the passage through even so rare a substance as the tail of a comet. The auroral line will perhaps show up to be the most interesting and the most spectacular phenomena in the passage of the earth through the comet's tail.

Dr. Humphreys of the Mount Weather observatory, speaking of this phenomena, says: "Evidently the source of this line is not definitely known but conceivably it may be rendered more brilliant by the passage of the earth through the tail of a comet, and therefore it would be well for some favorably situated observer carefully to measure its brilliancy on several consecutive nights, so selected as systematically to overlap the calculated date of our supposed passage through the tail of Halley's comet."

The late Prof. S. P. Langley said: "The encounter of the earth with a comet's tail would be like the encounter with a shadow, and the chances of a collision with the nucleus is remote indeed."

Some time about the middle of May the earth will pass through the tail of Halley's comet.

The real gist of the stunt will be known only by the mathematical astronomer, and if there should be a hitch in the performance they would hardly have the opportunity to explain the slip-up in the laws of gravitation.

Far away in the depths of space, so remote from our planetary system, lies the future comet. Across the abyss which intervenes between the comet and the sun the law of gravitation extends its sway. After the lapse of centuries, or thousands of years, the comet is seen to be rapidly approaching—it whirls around the sun, and then recedes further and further, perhaps never again to return to our system.

OLD INDIAN WANTS AID NOW

Victor of Many Battles Says "Money no Good After; Heap Good Now."

Walker, Minn.—Old John Smith, an Indian brave, victor in many battles and possessor of several personally collected scalps, was here from his Mud lake allotment in upper Cass county and was on his way to interview Agent John Frater regarding his pine holdings. The redman is nearly 100 years of age.

"Me die soon," said the old buck; "happy hunting grounds in little while! Want money; no good after dead; heap good now," continued the wizened warrior as he loaded a ponderous pipe with kinnikinic and thrust the long stem between his toothless gums.

The Indian is known as being one of the oldest Indians of his tribe. Notwithstanding his age, he is able to get around with those of much younger years, and while his face is wrinkled with the passing of many suns there is still the clear eye and certain lithesness of limb which the well preserved members of the tribe maintain until the Great Father calls them.

John boasts of killing six Sioux Indians in the early days, the fight occurring at Portage lake, seven miles from here.

Hard Relationship Puzzle.

"ST WITH ADVANCING AGE

Why the Man of Middle Age Does Not Retain the Taste of His Boyhood.

"I've just discovered why things tasted better to me when I was a boy than they do now," said the man, as he indifferently surveyed the viands the waiter put before him. "It's not because my appetite has become blase with age, but because I really had a larger sense of taste when I was a kid. Yes, I just got that information straight from a scientific friend. He said that kids have a sense of taste at the sides of their cheeks which disappears with maturity. He also told me that sour, sweet, bitter, alkali and salt are the only taste sensations, and the other things I eat I enjoy from my sense of smell rather than a sense of taste. He said if I would put sweet things on the tip of my tongue they would taste sweeter to me than if I just put them in my mouth indiscriminately, as it were and that if I wanted to make the taking of bitter medicine less disagreeable I should avoid putting it at the back of my tongue.

"Really, the things he told me about taste and my tongue made me almost afraid of eating. I didn't know my tongue was such a complex affair. I only wish the sense of taste in my cheeks would return while I tackle this piece of apple pie, so that it would taste as good to me as it used to in my boyhood days."

WAGNER AS A STATESMAN

Writer Gives an Intimation of What Great Ballplayer's Speech Would Be Like.

If Shortstop Hans Wagner should really be elected to congress it is possible that his maiden speech in the house would go something like this:

"I'm swinging hard against this bill, Mr. Speaker," he might say, "and if it comes within reaching distance I'm going to slam it against the scoreboard. I've been watching this play from the bench and it looks like a hippodrome to me. Th' guys that are trying to get the bill over are doing a funny stunt all right, but they ain't cut the corner of the plate with me. No, sir. O, I'm on to the signals! While our side is stealing second the other fellers will steal everything in sight. That ain't the way I was brought up to run the bases. I slide for 'em—an' no spiking! If I'm thrown out I take my medicine like a little man. I ain't used to playing in the dark with a lot of tricky outlaws. Give me a fair field and no favor, and straight umpiring and a seven-pound wagon tongue, and I'll hand this bill a smote that will carry it over the fence of defeat and drop it in the back alley of oblivion. That's me, Honus Wagner!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Schooling the Parrot.

Under the family's tutelage chattering seemed about all that the parrot was capable of, so an expert in the teaching of parrots was called in. The first thing the expert did was to feed him. Presently the bird blinked drowsily and the lesson began. The bird appeared to profit by his instruction, but his owner was not satisfied.

"I am afraid you have a harmful influence over him," said she. "He gets so dopey after you have been here a few minutes."

"That is because he has been doped a little," said the expert. "I mix a light sleeping potion with his food. He doesn't get enough to put him to sleep, but it makes him drowsy. All parrots learn better just before they go to sleep. If you can catch them on the edge of natural sleep you get better results, but this fellow is so lively that doping won't hurt him and he will learn more in a month that way than in a year of flopping around."

To Ward Off Old Age.

Without advancing the hope of lengthening the span of life by the sour-milk diet of Prof. Metchnikoff or any other plan, Dr. Doyen of Paris believes senile decay may be retarded and the body kept in healthful activity throughout the natural period. To preserve vitality he invokes the aid of ferments to increase the white corpuscles in the blood, which are known to work so effectively against parasitic germs. He has named his energizer "mycolysine," and he states that it powerfully stimulates the white corpuscles, thus not only lessening the inactivity of the old-age period, but giving resistance to various digestive and respiratory maladies. He claims that it acts against colds, bronchitis and even epidemic diseases.

Recovery of Lost Standards.

A curious experiment was once made to determine whether a lost standard could be recovered by purely personal efforts. The assumption was made that the standard of length was lost. One hundred operatives and others accustomed to dealing with measurements were asked to give by estimate their ideas of what the given standard was—in other words, to guess at length of the meter. It was found that the guesses were most accurate for lengths of about six inches—that small lengths were underestimated and larger ones were overestimated. Taking the average of the 100 subjects the result varied but a few one thousandths from the truth.

TAKE DUTCH CENSUS

Enumerators in Holland Have Same Trouble as Elsewhere.

Facts Difficult to Get Because Many Persons Are Apparently Too Stupid to Give Information—Some Amusing Answers.

The Hague.—Cards with questions to be answered for the decennial census of Holland were distributed recently. About 6,000,000 cards were sent out. The experience of the census enumerators, like that in many other countries, is discouraging or amusing, according to the point of view one takes of the matter. It is discouraging if one thinks that education has been compulsory in the Netherlands for many years and that there is so little to show for it. For it is patent that all those "heads of families" who had to fill in their own census cards and see to it that the other members of their family filled in theirs show a remarkable lack of education and even of plain common sense or intelligence.

Many were absolutely unwilling to fill in their cards; others really could neither read nor write or got hopelessly muddled in the questions and answers. Lots of the cards got lost or too much soiled for use. Some poverty-stricken people asked the enumerators whether they could "get soup on such a card" or whether they could "get work" on it. But few could understand the use of the cards or of the census, although the whole affair had been explained to the children in all the schools, so that they might be able to help their parents in filling out the cards.

Only in those cases where people were really unable, though willing, to do so were the census enumerators allowed to fill out the cards from dictation. Even then it was often difficult to make the people understand what was meant by every question or to get at the correct names, birth and marriage dates, the religious belief or business or employment of the people.

One old woman had answered the question, "What is your principal business or employment?" by writing: "Praying to God for my sovereign and my country." That she truly considered this her principal mission in life could be seen by referring to the census papers of ten years ago, when she had answered the same question in the same way.

Of course, there were many amusing mistakes made—for instance, when a father named as the chief business of his son of 14 years, "being an idiot." Another father gave his little daughter's chief employment as "eating." There seemed to be a good deal of difference of opinion among the people as to who is really the "head of the household." Some households were described as having as many "heads" as "members." In others the husbands had named their wives as the "heads."

USEFULNESS OF ZOO SIREN

It Calls Keepers to Rescue Marguerite, Virginia Deer, Who Tried to Join Elks.

New York.—The big siren which was lately installed in the Bronx zoo to signal the keepers the escape of any animal from its enclosure had its first tryout the other afternoon. Keepers ran from all directions to find out what was the trouble. Marguerite, one of the Virginia deer, had escaped from her yard and taken with her her fawn, now a sturdy youngster of some six months. The chain fastenings on her gate had been left loose and Marguerite in investigating it found the way to freedom suddenly opened.

She found her way into the elk inclosure before the keepers got trace of her. When they found her the big and ugly elk, Stanley, was making great efforts to break down the individual netting which his temper had earned for him in order to oust the interloper from his herd.

When they made their rounds next morning the keepers found that a gray fox, sent to them about a week ago from the northern part of the state, was dead. He had been put in a runway in which were several female foxes and a few young ones, all of which owed allegiance to an old dog fox. Evidently the old fellow resented the intrusion, for the torn-up ground and teeth marks on the throat of the newcomer showed that he had been killed in a fight.

DOG FEEDS IMPRISONED HOG

Canine Carries Corn to Animal Wedged Under Feeding Platform for Two Months.

Madison, Wis.—The mysterious disappearance of a Dane county hog, the loss of which, in view of a price of more than nine dollars a hundred for pork, has been the cause of lamentations on the part of its owner, was explained the other day when the porker, worn to a skeleton, was found wedged beneath its feeding platform. It weighed only 50 pounds.

Speculation was rife as to what had kept the animal alive the two long winter months it was a prisoner. Then Mrs. Blanchar recalled seeing a puppy with an ear of corn in its mouth on several occasions going under the platform.

It is now thought certain the hog was kept alive by the food thus provided.

FARM AND FIELD

FARM NOTES.

Never disturb the bees in cold weather.

Spring is the best time to make a start in bee-keeping.

Never approach the bee hives from the front if you would keep peace with the inmates.

You can breed the nubbins out of the corn just as easy as you can breed the scrub cows out of the dairy herd.

Isn't it a shame that the wheat lands of this country produce an average of only about 12 bushels per acre?

The hired man who shirks or dodges his work to save a backache will never be anything but a hired man.

Gardening time will be here before you are ready for it, if you are not careful, regardless of the cold winds today.

While you are backed up to the big stove in the grocery store, don't leave your team shivering in the cold unblanketed.

The gasoline engine, valuable as it is, will never entirely take the place of really good horses on the farm or anywhere else.

It is not good policy to keep a boy on the farm if he has the ability to earn the wages of a dozen hired men in the city. Let him go.

The seeds of all kinds should be selected and the cleanest and best of the different varieties. If possible none other should be used.

Select for fall plowing the stubborn, refractory clay soil, and on all fields not fall-plowed have cover crops growing, to be plowed under in spring.

Bees are very susceptible to odors and that of a dog or horse which may cling on the garments of some one near the hives will rouse their anger.

IMPLEMENT FOR SOD-CUTTING

Tool Shown in Illustration Will Dig Out Section of Turf with Neatness and Dispatch.

Expressly designed by a New Jersey man for the purpose of cutting sod, the implement shown in the illustration greatly expedites that work. It resembles a shovel with high, sharp sides, and has a hinged footpiece which comes down in front and chops out the section of turf which the shovel digs loose. The shovel is thrust under the sod until it can go no further. Then the knife is jammed down and the whole withdrawn with a neat piece of sod. The operation consumes only a fraction of the time required to dig out a piece of turf by the old method, and has the additional merit of bringing the sod out whole and with smooth sides, and not in the ragged shape that it sometimes is cut. In the middle of the handle of this tool is a catch to engage the knife section and hold it out of the way when it is not needed to cut the sod loose.

PLANNING FARM FOR PROFIT

Bulletin Recently Issued by United States Department of Agriculture Important to Farmer.

A recent bulletin issued by the United States department of agriculture, entitled "Replanning a Farm for Profit," deals with principles that are vital to successful farming in the corn belt. Few farmers realize the difference in income that may be produced on the farms by the systematic introduction and rotation of clover or other leguminous crops over the entire area of their tillable land. The planning of rotations to meet certain feed requirements and to grow crops which shall be the greatest income producers under given conditions is a problem that is not easily solved by all the tillers of the soil. The conservation of soil fertility by appropriate rotations together with applications of manures and fertilizers in such manner as will maintain a permanent system of agriculture has been largely overlooked by farm owners in the past. Farmers' Bulletin 370 assists the farmer in solving these difficulties. It discusses a run-down farm in Illinois and plans six different types of farming that may be substituted for the usual one of corn and oats now practiced, so as to raise the income all the way from two to five times as much as that commonly received, and at the same time increase the fertility of the soil. A copy of this bulletin may be had free on application to a member of congress or the secretary of agriculture, Washington.

CAVES THEIR HOMES

Peasants of Roumania, According to Report, Are Very Poor.

Austrian Economist Finds Six Million Persons Existing in Physical and Moral Misery—Meat and Milk Are Unknown.

Vienna, Austria.—Stray cases of peasant disturbances in Roumania come as a reminder of the intolerable conditions under which a vast majority of the population there are dragging out a wretched existence. According to the reports of Dr. C. Raczwski a prominent economist who has just visited Roumania, 6,000,000 peasants are living in the greatest physical and moral misery. From competent sources Dr. Raczwski ascertained that no less than 54,772 peasant families were living in holes and pits, which they themselves had dug out of the ground, like the troglodytes or cave dwellers of ancient times. Out of 1,088,950 cottages in the villages, only 74,655 were built of brick or stone. The majority of the dwellings consisted only of one room, lighted through the door or through a window, with paper stuck in the frame to take the place of glass.

In these miserable habitations thousands of peasant families subsist upon eight or ten cents a day. Of course, these people don't know the taste of meat nor even of milk. Having no pasture lands they are compelled to work for the landed proprietors and have no opportunity of raising cows. Only recently a prominent Roumanian writer stated that many Roumanian children know no other than mother's milk. This assertion would seem to be quite justified, for in the commune of Blaska, for example, which has a population of 2,706, there are only three cows to be found.

The principal nourishment of the Roumanian peasantry consists of maize, or corn. This too monotonous and insufficient dietary explains the enormous spread of pellagra in the country, which, destroying the body and the nervous system, frequently drives the sufferer to insanity and suicide. In the year 1899, 21,822 cases of pellagra were reported and five years later the number had risen to 41,687. In seven years there were nearly a quarter of a million cases. The rate of infant mortality, too, is appalling. 48 per cent of the children dying before the end of their seventh year. In fact, the degeneration of the population is clearly proved through official inquiries and the yearly reports of the recruiting commissions.

Morally and mentally the condition of the people is equally low. Even when the town population is included less than 15 per cent of the inhabitants are able to read and write. With a population of 7,000,000 there are only 4,000 schools and 6,500 teachers. At the end of the first or second school year the great majority of the children leave to go to work on the land. In one village where 180 children were enrolled every year on the school books only two girls and one boy could be found who had completed the full school course.

That peasant revolutions break out under such conditions can scarcely be wondered at. And they are suppressed with ruthless military force of gendarmerie, infantry, cavalry and even artillery. In the outbreak of two years ago between 12,000 and 15,000 peasants were shot down and many villages leveled to the ground. The government has always refused to give out figures, but these are quoted from a reliable source.

Industrial progress is slow. In the larger branches like the petroleum works, there are altogether between 50,000 and 60,000 workmen employed in the medium and smaller trades, the number ranges from 120,000 to 150,000. Roumania unfortunately has only two classes of people, the rich and the poor. Out of a quarter of a million grown-up persons who died in four years only 15,099 left behind them more than $100 worth of property of all kinds. In the same period 42 rich men left same $25,000,000, or more than one-third of all the property left in that time. This absence of a middle class is greatly to be deplored, as it is responsible for much of the misery existing in Roumania.

IS BIGGEST FISH HATCHERY

Troughs on Columbia River to Have 60,000,000 Egg Capacity—Largest in World.

Boonville, Ore.—The biggest salmon hatchery in the world has been opened here. It will be the central plant for the state and is located on the Columbia river, where most of the fry will probably be liberated. The building is 55x230 feet and is equipped with 248 16-foot hatching troughs, having a capacity of 50,000,000 eggs. There are now 20,000,000 eggs on hand ready for hatching.

Water is supplied from a near-by creek through a 12-inch pipe, the flow being 3,000 gallons a minute. Nursery and feeding ponds are supplied sufficient for feeding 2,000,000 young fish.

Eighty-Year-Old Sprinter.

Bloomington, Ind.—Perley Pearson, one of the largest land owners of this community, has just celebrated his eightieth birthday anniversary by sprinting a quarter of a mile in 2:19 flat. Mr. Pearson, who is unusually active for a man of his years, wore a pair of heavy rubbers when he made the run.

USE OF CO-OPERATIVE SPIRIT

Always Lacking in Farmer and Present with City Man—Many Benefits to Be Derived.

Business men of the city work together; those of the country act independently. These statements apply only in a general way. The reason for the co-operative spirit shown among city business men and the lack of it in rural communities is not far to seek. The former is constantly dealing with other people; his daily work brings him in contact with them in a business way. This contact soon develops a confidence in his fellow men that will readily form an organization or association when it is shown that economical benefits may be obtained. On the other hand, the farmer does not deal with others as much as he deals with things, especially with things. His daily work may be in the fields or among the stock or in the orchards, says Michael. The major part of his attention is expended upon the farm. [illegible] he sells his products in the [illegible] occasionally he deals with [illegible] bors, but when he deals with the [illegible] man the conditions are [illegible] sentional for the farmer and there is no initiative demanded on his part. If he buys grain, stock or land or sells or property from his neighbor the business relations are the same as when the city man deals with his fellowmen, but such transactions are so few that it does not develop in him that spirit of business confidence found in the city man. It is therefore easily understood why the farmer has been the last man to make use of co-operative enterprises. The very conditions of his life have kept him from it. He has not been educated to it and it is folly to assume that he will with one stroke organize his business with that of his neighbor in such a way as to eliminate much of the expense and disadvantage he is put to in carrying on his trade relations. Nevertheless, it is essential that the spirit of co-operation be developed. Organization of almost every kind and class of commercial business compels the farmer to organize with his neighbor farmer. It must come as a matter of protection, but in order to do this successfully, the farmer must have confidence in co-operative organizations lest they fail. This confidence can only be developed by beginning in a small way. When he realizes that there is real benefit to be derived and that it is possible for him to work together with his neighbors after some specified plan, then he can undertake larger things, but not until then.

It would seem, therefore, that the greatest good can be done our rural communities by encouraging farmers to organize to carry on their business in a small way only, to start with that as their education along this line is developed, larger undertakings can be started. It would also seem that any attempt to begin a very comprehensive organization, one that incurs a great deal of responsibility from people who are not accustomed to co-operative enterprises, would not only be unwise, but would ultimately be a detriment in that their failure is almost assured, and such failure would make those participating in the undertaking, as well as others, very reticent about attempting co-operation even in a small way. It is not the purpose to despise the farmer nor exalt the city man; we only wish to encourage the former to acquire, even before necessity demands, what the latter has already developed to a considerable degree. To fruit growers the idea should appeal strongly.

FRUIT GROWERS TO ORGANIZE

Realizing Strength and Many Other Advantages to Be Derived, Californians Form Union.

Efforts are being made to form an organization of the fresh fruit growers of the state somewhat similar to the one under which the citrus fruit growers of southern California are so successfully operating. It is realized that owing to their organization and strength, the citrus fruit shippers enjoy many advantages that the deciduous fruit men do not, a most important one being in lower freight rates on their products. Russell Stephens, a pioneer fruit grower, shipper and a great organizer, is the chief mover and worker in the matter.

A Strong Alliance.

It would seem as though Kentucky blue grass and white clover had entered a compact eternal in its nature. That is to say, a compact to dwell together in the same domain without a shadow of disagreement. When they once obtain possession there they remain. The grass grows up earlier in the spring than the clover. It ripens early, then the clover comes on. The plants of clover multiply continually and others die, and as they do the dead roots furnish food for the blue grass plants. In return, while the blue grass plants are not cut too closely they furnish protection to the roots of the clover in winter.

Cottonseed Meal.

At present prices, on the basis of protein content, cottonseed meal is the cheapest feeding stuff on the market, says a writer in Baltimore American. I have fed dairy cows for a great many years, and at times have found it advisable to sell corn and oats, although home raised on the farm, and to get in their place cottonseed meal. You may think this strange, but it is good, common sense.

FORM BLOU E CLUB

UNIQUE IDEA EVOLVED BY GROUP OF GIRLS.

Originate Among Themselves Ideas for Summer Garments—Some Effective Combinations They Display.

Sewing for oneself has a charm all its for those who are deft with the needle and it is a great saving in money besides. Two or three girls who live near each other have formed a blouse club and are busy making their summer blouses. As each of them has individual ideas they have evolved some charming things.

There is one delightful little cotton blouse for traveling. It is in the natural color and is tucked on each side of the front with tucks in groups of three. The back is tucked in the same way and so are the sleeves and stock. It has six buttons in front and this is the coquettish touch of pink coral, and three buttons in each sleeve of the same. There are six sets of buttonholes and the coral buttons are sewed back to back to hold tabs of white china, so that they may be slipped out like studs when the blouse goes to the tub. A bow of narrow pink velvet ribbon in the coral shade is tied about the stock at the base. It will be worn with a brown suit.

Another one of the blouses made by this girl is of white chiffa silk with big black polka dots, and it will be worn with her white serge suit. It has a yoke, a shallow one, back and front, of fine pin tucks. The sleeves are pin tucked from shoulder to elbow, half way round the sleeve, leaving the fullness at the back. The tucks run half way round the sleeve, not up and down. In front there are three stitched tabs, beneath which have escapes a frill of coarse white net with black lace edge. A French black satin bow is worn at the neck with this.

Since most of the spring blouses match the suit with which they are worn, one of the girls made herself a blouse of navy blue net to be worn with a navy serge coat and skirt. The net was tucked all over in wide tucks, fully three-quarters of an inch deep, and a perfectly plain blouse cut. A jabot of the net, knife plaited, reaches half way to the waist in front. It is sewed to the blouse and is made by sewing plaited net ruffles, one on each side, to a band of dull gilt trimming. They taper to nothing at the lower end. At the neck is a perfectly stiff bow of the gilt. This will be worn with a navy blue straw hat, roughly trimmed only with gilt mercury wings at the left side. The stock of the blouse is of the tucked net, high and boned.

To be worn with a lavender linen there is a little blouse of lavender batiste which might have come straight from an importers. It is so daintily made. It closes in the back and has clusters of pin tucks to form a yoke, alternating with a half inch box plait stitched flat. On this is plait the blonde girl who will wear the blouse has embroidered round dots in wash silks. The collar is pin tucked and near the top is one of the embroidered plaits. The sleeves are decorated with a few clusters of tucks and they have deep cuffs of the pin tucks and embroidered box plaits. The whole blouse is put together with the finest white beading and is dainty and attractive.

Always Lacking in Farmer and Now Present with City Man—Many Benefits to Be Derived.

Business men of the city work together, those of the country act independently. These statements are true only in a general way. The reason for the co-operative spirit shown among city business men and the lack of it in rural communities is not far to seek. The former is constantly dealing with other people; his daily work brings him in contact with them in a business way. This constant relation develops a confidence in his fellow men that will readily grow into co-operation or association when it is shown that commercial results can be obtained. On the other hand, the farmer does not deal with men so much as he deals with nature and with things. His daily work takes him into fields or among his stock or in his orchards, says Michigan Farmer. The major part of his attention is devoted upon the farm. Incidentally, he may sell his products to the city man; he may purchase supplies with his neighbor, but when he deals with the city man the conditions are made convenient for the farmer and there is no initiative demanded on his part. If he buys a grain stock or land or other property from his neighbor, the business relations are the same as when the city man deals with his patrons, but such transactions are so few that it does not develop in him that spirit of business confidence noted in the city man. It is therefore easily understood why the farmer has been the last man to make use of co-operative enterprises. The very conditions of his life have kept him from it. He has not been educated to it and it is folly to assume that he will with one stroke organize his business with that of his neighbor in such a way as to eliminate much of the expense and disadvantage he is put to in marketing on his trade relations. Nevertheless, it is essential that the spirit of co-operation be developed. Organization of almost every kind and class of commercial business compels the farmer to organize with his neighbor farmer. It must come as a matter of protection, but in order to do this successfully, the farmer must have confidence in co-operative organizations lest they fail. This confidence can only be developed by beginning in a small way. When he realizes that there is real benefit to be derived and that it is possible for him to work together with his neighbors after some specified plan, then he can undertake larger things, but not until then.

It would seem, therefore, that the greatest good can be done our rural communities by encouraging farmers to organize to carry on their business in a small way only, to start with, and that as their education along this line is developed, larger undertakings can be started. It would also seem that any attempt to begin a very comprehensive organization, one that incurs a great deal of responsibility from people who are not accustomed to co-operative enterprises, would not only be unwise, but would ultimately be a detriment in that their failure is almost assured, and such failure would make those participating in the undertaking, as well as others, very reticent about attempting co-operation even in a small way. It is not our purpose to despise the farmer and exalt the city man; we only wish to encourage the former to acquire, even before necessity demands, what the latter has already developed to a considerable degree. To fruit growers the idea should appeal strongly.

FRUIT GROWERS TO ORGANIZE

Realizing Strength and Many Other Advantages to Be Derived, Californians Form Union.

Efforts are being made to form an organization of the fresh fruit growers of the state somewhat similar to the one under which the citrus fruit growers of southern California are so successfully operating. It is realized that owing to their organization and strength, the citrus fruit shippers enjoy many advantages that the deciduous fruit men do not, a most important one being in lower freight rates on their products. Russ D. Stephens, a pioneer fruit grower, shipper and a great organizer, is the chief mover and worker in the matter.

A Strong Alliance.

It would seem as though Kentucky blue grass and white clover had encountered a compact eternal in its nature. That is to say, a compact to dwell together in the same domain without a shadow of disagreement. Where they once obtain possession there they remain. The grass grows up earlier in the spring than the clover. It ripens early, then the clover comes on. The plants of clover multiply continually and others die, and as they do the dead roots furnish food for the blue grass plants. In return, when the blue grass plants are not cut too closely they furnish protection to the roots of the clover in winter.

Cottonseed Meal.

At present prices, on the basis of protein content, cottonseed meal is the cheapest feeding stuff on the market, says a writer in Baltimore American. I have fed dairy cows for a many years, and at times have found it advisable to sell corn and oats, though home raised on the farm, and to get in their place cottonseed meal. You may think this strange, but it is good, common sense.

FORM BLOU E CLUB

UNIQUE IDEA EVOLVED BY GROUP OF GIRLS.

Originate Among Themselves Ideas for Summer Garments—Some Effective Combinations They Display.

Sewing for oneself has a fascination for those who are deft with the needle and it is a great saving in money besides. Two or three girls who live near each other have formed a blouse club and are busy making their summer blouses. As each of them has individual ideas, they have evolved some charming things.

There is one delightful little pongee blouse for traveling. It is in the natural color and is tucked on each side of the front with tucks in groups of three. The back is tucked in the same way and so are the sleeves and stock. It has six buttons in front—and this is the coquettish touch—of pink coral, and three buttons in each sleeve of the same. There are two sets of buttonholes and the coral buttons are sewed back to back to buttons of white china, so that they may be slipped out like studs when the blouse goes to the tub. A bow of narrow pink velvet ribbon in the coral shade is tied about the stock at the base. It will be worn with a brown suit.

Another one of the blouses made by this girl is of white china silk with big black polka dots, and it will be worn with her white serge suit. It has a yoke, a shallow one, back and front, of fine pin tucks. The sleeves are pin tucked from shoulder to elbow, half way round the sleeve, leaving the fullness at the back. The tucks run half way round the sleeve, not up and down. In front there are little stitched tabs, beneath which half escapes a frill of coarse white net with black lace edge. A Frenchy black satin bow is worn at the neck with this.

Since most of the spring blouses match the suit with which they are worn one of the girls made herself a blouse of navy blue net to be worn with a navy serge coat and skirt. The net was tucked all over in wide tucks, fully three-quarters of an inch deep, and a perfectly plain blouse cut. A yoke of the net, knife plaited, reaches half way to the waist in front. It is sewed to the blouse and is made by sewing plaited net ruffles, one on each side, to a band of dull gilt trimming. They taper to nothing at the lower end. At the neck is a perfectly stiff bow of the gilt. This will be worn with a navy blue straw hat, rough, trimmed only with gilt mercury wings at the left side. The stock of the blouse is of the tucked net, high and boned.

To be worn with a lavender linen there is a little blouse of lavender batiste which might have come straight from an importers, it is so daintily made. It closes in the back and has clusters of pin tucks to form a yoke, alternating with a half inch box plait. The blonde girl who will wear the blouse has embroidered round dots in wash silks. The collar is pin tucked and over the top is one of the embroidered plaits. The sleeves are decorated with a few clusters of tucks, and they have deep cuffs of the pin tucks and embroidered box plaits. The whole blouse is put together with the finest white beading and is dainty and attractive.

Look Well to Your Kidneys.

Kidney diseases come on slowly. Its march is indicated by cloudy or highly colored urine, pains in the back, frequent urinating at night, dry tongue, thirst, etc. Don't neglect these symptoms, but use U-RI-A-CURA and be relieved of all these symptoms. Many have been cured of Kidney and Bladder troubles with this remedy. Druggists sell it at 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle. Send for booklet of particulars. Granger Med. Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

FOR MORNING WEAR.

A practical dress for morning wear or traveling purposes, made semi-princess and closing in front. The waist is tucked front and back in becoming lines and attached to skirt with narrow belt of material. A removal chemisette of tucked white net gives a bright finish at neck.

For a Black Hat.

When deciding on the trimming for that black velvet hat hearken to that little voice from Paris.

The very latest idea is to trim the shape, which, by the way, is turned up at the back, with a huge bow of cream-colored silk.

This white silk is brocaded or embroidered with old gold and rose silk, and as a last touch a narrow band of fur is placed on each edge.

ADDS TO CONSCIENCE FUND

Tennessee Preacher Sends Forty Two-Cent Postage Stamps to Street Car Company.

Syracuse, N. Y.—"Conscience money" came to C. Loomis Allen, general manager of the Syracuse Rapid Transit Company, in the form of 40 two-cent stamps, purporting to have been forwarded by Rev. H. E. Tower, a Tennessee clergyman.

The letter, which was the first instance of restitution for evaded car fares on the local street railway company, read:

"Maryville, Tenn.—Dear Sir: Some time ago, while a resident of your city I evaded several fares on the street car. Inclosed please find 40 stamps refund.

"I am serving the right Master now and desire to make all things right as far as possible. If you are not the right official to pay kindly pass it on to the proper official. Yours in his service,

DIVORCES HER DEAD HUSBAND

Peculiar Decree Secured by Woman to Bind Her Hold on Homestead—Collects Insurance.

Grangeville, Idaho.—A peculiar divorce suit was decided by Judge Steele, who granted a divorce to Mrs. Anna G. Murphy, whose husband, J. W. Murphy, has been considered dead for five years.

Six years ago Murphy suddenly disappeared and has not been heard of since. Mrs. Murphy recently exercised her widow's right to file on land, and to make sure that no complications arise, instituted action for divorce.

Mrs. Murphy has also continued during her husband's absence to keep his life insurance assessments paid up, and at the expiration of seven years from the time of his disappearance will be able to collect the insurance.

IN BRIDAL FINERY

SLIP FORM IS FAVORITE FOR WEDDING GOWN.

Utmost Magnificence Is Allowed for Momentous Occasion — Shorter Trains the Rule of Fashion for This Season.

In both imported and domestic trousseaux, the wedding gown in slip form is much to the fore, a princess overdress, on much the same lines, of embroidered net, or chiffon or lace, covering the slip to the feet or else falling somewhat below the knees. One beautiful fancy seen in a late wardrobe was a slip of magnificent satin covered by a princess jersey of silver lace, from which fell a skirt drop of net edged with a wide band of the net.

Importers display many of these jerseys in separate form in everything from the finest lace to a cuirass of pearl beads. They are bought in this shape and put over lace or chiffon slips, as the case may require.

The white materials used for altar frocks are in a dead shade, though the bride to whom this trying white is unbecoming may accept a material in a faint cream. Trains are moderately short, and, if the bride wishes, she may go to the altar with her face uncovered, though tradition suggests the propriety of wearing the veil over the face. Unhemmed tulle, bunched over a coronet or half wreath of orange blossoms, still constitutes the veil most liked, for tulle is always becoming and fairly inexpensive. Other veils of more elaborate sort are of Chantilly, Spanish lace or lace-edged Brussels net, and these are considerably smaller than the tulle ones.

In the department of negligees, the flounced petticoat, topped by a loose or belted jacket, is plainly the favorite lounging habit, for when prettily made such a combination may be worn for breakfast and for the reception of intimate friends.

So complete is the little walking suit pictured, which is eminently practicable for the bride's traveling gown, that it needs scarcely an accessory beyond the hat and shirtwaist. The coat, which is without revers, fastens far over the under lap at both bodice and skirt point. It is trimmed with a band of braiding done on the material and finished with a satin edge, the wide belt being formed of this material. The skirt is a plaited model, braided at the bottom of the apron, and showing six satin covered buttons.

One of the very newest of the baim hat styles is also shown by this figure, the shape being of rough straw and the trimming of wide louisine ribbon and closely massed flowers.

Cloth, serge, or a novelty wool suiting appropriately elegant in color would do for the gown; and if it is in a warm cream with black braiding and satin edge, it would be very striking. In this event, the hat could be of leghorn with a band of folded black satin and a front knot of pink roses or violets.

New Stockings.

Evidently the day of gaudy stockings is again with us, yet it must be admitted that the new ones are artistic. They are embroidered in dainty French designs over the instep and up to the ankle.

Lilies of the valley are used on blue and pink stockings. Small rambler roses with green leaves are used on black. Morning-glories are used on pale violet, and violets are used on both white and black.

Russia's Free Tea Stalls.

The Russian government is commonly supposed to be autocratic and even despotic, but, like other autocracies, it has an odd way of being at times quite paternal. In St. Petersburg tea stalls are provided by the authorities for the prevention of the spread of cholera. The disease was traced to the use of polluted drinking water, and accordingly the government established these stalls all over the country for the supply of beverages that should be free from all suspicion. The notice on top of the stall states that the sanitary committee provide hot water, tea and sugar free of charge to all comers. The attendants are paid by the government, and are not allowed to take any money for their services.—Wide World Magazine.

Photography by Phosphorescence.

There is sometimes employed abroad an ingenious method of making photographic copies of plates and engravings in books which cannot be removed from the libraries, and where the use of the camera is prohibited. A cardboard is coated with a phosphorescent substance, exposed to sunlight or electric light, and then placed at the back of the engraving, while a dry photographic plate is placed on the face of the engraving. The book is closed, and after a period varying from 15 to 60 minutes, depending argely on the thickness of the paper, a satisfactory negative is produced. The book is enclosed in a black cloth during the manipulation.

Transient—Who's that prosperous looking fellow over there?

Native—That's Squire Shuvvell, the millionaire ditch-digger. Everybody laughed at him years ago when he refused to become a doctor or a lawyer, and even turned down the correspondence schools' offer to make him a window dresser or an electrical engineer. Time proved his wisdom, and to-day, as the only unskilled laborer in this section, he can command almost fabulous prices.—Puck.

One Conductor Who Was Cured.

Mr. Wilford Adams is his name, and he writes about it.—"Some time ago I was confined to my bed with chronic rheumatism. I used two bottles of Foley's Kidney Remedy with good effect, and the third bottle put me on my feet and I resumed work as conductor on the Lexington, Ky., Street Railway. It gave me more relief than any medicine I had ever used, and it will do all you claim in cases of rheumatism." Foley's Kidney Remedy cures rheumatism by eliminating the uric acid from the blood. WARREN TOPPAN, Lynn, Mass.

Cured of severe compound cold and cough by

Vinol

"From Dec. 20, '08, to March 1, '09, I had three bad colds, one on top of the other. I got so weak I could hardly get around. Nothing seemed to help me until I began to take Vinol. The change was magic. Three bottles completely fixed that compound cold and stopped the terrible cough—and what surprises me most, at the same time it cured me of a severe stomach trouble that has bothered me for 20 years. Vinol is certainly a wonderful medicine."

Mr. Toppan is one of Lynn's most prominent and highly respected merchants, whose word is as good as his bond.

The reason Vinol is so successful in such cases is because it contains the two most world-famed tonics—the medicinal, strengthening, body-building elements of Cod Liver Oil and Tonic Iron.

BOWIN L. JONES.

Vote for John A. Lusk for Railroad Commissioner. Read his article.

It is much to be regretted that the Democratic party of Chilton county should let this opportunity pass without a candidate for Representative in the Legislature, and only one candidate for county commissioner. The prospects for Democratic success were never better, and with all pulling together there is a certainty of victory.

Gov. Patterson, of Tennessee, in granting a pardon to Col. Duncan, whose sentence of twenty years for the killing of Senator Carmack, was affirmed by the supreme court of that State, has struck a blow at justice. The Governor, apparently, is greater than any supreme court.

The coming primary, one week from Monday, is a family affair among Democrats, in which each competitor has a fair and equal showing, and there is not the slightest occasion to become hysterical about any of them. Afterwards comes the tug of war, and now is a good time to "Put your trust in Providence and keep your powder dry." It will be needed before the November election.

The Hon. Emmet O'Neal is expected to address the voters at Clanton next Tuesday, and we hope to see a large audience to hear the distinguished gentleman—the next governor of the state of Alabama. He is an eloquent speaker, in full sympathy with the masses of the people, and says what he means and means what he says; so much cannot be said of all candidates for office.

The amendment is dead—is a thing of the past and should not be mentioned in the present campaign, shriek the Mallory papers, in alluding to the amendment which was swamped by the electors last November. And then they go back fourteen years and resurrect an old story that O'Neal was a Palmer and Buckner supporter Mr. O'Neal flatly denies the story, and the word of O'Neal is sufficent evidence to the unprejudiced voter, and with a magnificent majority on the 2d of May they will vindicate him.

HON. JOHN A. LUSK FOR RAILROAD COMMISSIONER

His friends are confident of his nomination. The people, the traveling public, the merchant and the shipper appreciate his aid in securing the 2½ cent passenger rate and lower freight rates, prompt settlements for lost goods, and the law requiring the commissioners to visit each county, as well as many other laws.

His fairness, firmness and demands for better schedules, cleaner depots and better service make the people for him. Every one who rides on the railroads, or ships anything, or buys anything shipped on the railroads gets the benefit of his labor in their behalf

The lower rates are saving to the people hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the railroads are enjoying the greatest prosperity in the history of the state.

Mr. Lusk is now serving the short unexpired term of Col Harris on the Commission, and according to Democratic rule should be endorsed for a full term by the voters on May 2nd.—Guntersville Democrat.

MORAL—BE A FENCE RIDER

From The Anniston Hot Blast.

We once stood and fought for principle and what we believed to be right. Nowadays, if a man stands out in the open, and advocates what he believes to be for the best interest of his state, in the mind of some it is considered that, however able, or however worthy, he has sacrificed himself and must be punished. But there has come to our people a great reawakening, and, struggling from the lowest moral plane touched politically in their history, our people are reaching for higher ground and in this campaign are going to re-establish the set by our fathers!

The Hot Blast is for Mr. Knox for the senate. He made the opening speech at the Montgomery convention against the Amendment, and set the pace of that campaign. In his announcement he declared for O'Neal, and set the pace of that campaign. Everyone knows where he stood in the former campaign, and everyone knows where he stands in the present campaign. Mr. Knox is not running against Mr. Mallory for governor, he is not running against Mr. O'Neal for governor; he is running against Mr. White and Mr. Bankhead for the senate. If elected to the senate, he will have to deal, not with state, but with national issues.

Whether you were an Amendist or an Anti-Amendist, whether you are for O'Neal or Mallory, if you have any respect for yourself you must respect a man who has the courage of his convictions, who stands for principle and for what he believes to be the best interests of his state. A contrary practice has brought us to our present low moral plane politically.

The modern idea, which prevails with some, seems to be that a candidate, to succeed, must be all things to all men. If the voters are divided on a great public question, he must seek to persuade both sides that really at heart he is with both of them; he must be guilty of moral cowardice, and he must not declare how he stands on any public question.

In the Amendment campaign, Mr. Bankhead was on the fence until the battle was fought and the victory practically assured. In the present campaign Mr. Bankhead and Mr. White are both on the fence, if their public utterances are to be considered.

Now, then, we have three points to make to the people of Alabama.

The first is, that no battle can be fought or won under the leadership of a mere fence-rider.

The second is, that if a man comes out in the open and fights for principle and for what he believes to be the best interests of his state, and a mere fence-rider is to walk off with the best office in the gift of the people, what reward is there for a man to stand for principle, and advocate what he believes to be for the best interest of his people.

The third and final point is, are the people of Alabama going to hold up to the youth of the present and succeeding generation the moral that, if you would succeed in your aspirations for public office before this constituency, you must not come out in the open, you must not stand for principle, but you must be a fence-rider?

Mr. Knox was the leader in the alternate senatorship race, and by a combination of circumstances, if not of candidates, against him, was knocked down to third place. Mr. Bankhead, as we are advised, is industriously circulating the report that a vote for Mr. Knox is a vote for Mr. White. On the other hand, Mr. White's friends seek to inculcate the idea that a vote for Mr. Knox is a vote for Mr. Bankhead. Evidently both of them recognize Mr. Knox as the winner, and some tremendous effort must be made to accomplish this defeat. But on May 2 the people are going to make their own verdict, and that verdict will be pronounced in favor of the Man from Calhoun.

Magnificent Dining-Room.

Mr. and Mrs. Marsden J. Perry of Newport and Providence, are having an immense dining-room, copied from a castle in England, added to their estate, Bleak House, on Ocean drive. The room measures 24x40 feet and faces the sea. From the table each guest can watch yacht races. One hundred guests can be seated at the table.

Impossible.

"Losing at poker again? I found these two aces in your pocket!" stormed his wife.

"Losing with two aces in my pocket? Absurd, woman!" he retorted.

Not Our Language.

"Your wife says your youngest baby can talk."

"Yes," answered Mr. Biggins, with a slight hesitation. "But he appears to take naturally to something like Volapuk or Esperanto."

Tonic or Stimulant?

There is an immense difference between a tonic and a stimulant. Up one day, way back the next; that's a stimulant. Steady progress day by day toward perfect health; that's a tonic. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a tonic, a strong tonic. The only Sarsaparilla entirely free from alcohol. Do not stimulate unless your doctor says so. He knows. Ask him. Do as he says. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Constipation is the one great cause of sick-headache, biliousness, indigestion, bad breath, debility, nervousness. Has your doctor ever recommended Ayer's Pills to you?

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

¶ It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point. "It's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

GONE TO LIVE WITH JESUS.

God in his infinite love and wisdom saw fit to call from us our much loved friend and sister Mrs. I. N. Eddye, after an illness of several weeks.

She was a member of Mt. Carmel Baptist church at Adams, Ala. and was a most patient suffer, submiting all to Jesus, having been one of His followers more than thirty years; was a devoted christian, never tiring of doing good in the name of Him who doeth all things well.

We feel that ours is a great loss, but He who never makes a mistake saw it best. She leaves a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss, but their loss is her eternal gain.

The farmers are all getting along fine with their work, some are done planting cotton, others are planting.

The Sunday school at this place is progressing nicely under the management of our faithful Supt. R. E Jones, he exerts every effort possible for the advancement of he school and I too must say the pupils are doing everything that lies in their power to grasp the truth of God and to become useful in His service. Rev. T. J. Deason will fill his regular appointment here the 4th, Sunday and Saturday before. The preaching hour on Saturday has been changed from 11 o'clock a.m. too 2 o'clock p.m. All the members are requested to attend on Saturday as there is going to be communion and foot washing. There will be Sunday school Sunday morning at 9:30, and singing at 10.

Sara's Employer

By Philip Orth

From the very first Gladwin had to admit to himself that Sara was perfect of her kind. She had come to him at a time when he was sadly in need of her assistance. His own stenographer had fallen ill and had gone away to a rest cure; it was the time of the year when business was heavy and experienced help hard to find. Gladwin in despair was just steeling his mind to choose between two doubtful young persons whom a popular employment agency had sent to him when Sara appeared. She had been filling a position, temporarily, in the absence of a regular stenographer. That regular stenographer had returned and she was out of employment. The man in whose office she had worked, having some acquaintance with Gladwin and knowing his need, had sent her to him. And Gladwin hired her at once, with a secure feeling of relief that he had not been forced from necessity to employ a makeshift.

Sara told him that her former position had been her first, but for all that she did not seem to lack experience. She was alert, obedient, dainty—and yet business-like in all her methods. Her work was always done on time and with exquisite precision. She did not ask questions. She did not leave things lying about. She always hit the waste-paper basket when she aimed for it. She did not bother Gladwin about useless details; indeed, she rarely spoke to him at all unless she was first spoken to. Her manner was attractive. It was reserved, dignified, calm. She was never in a hurry, never anything but at ease. She came at the stroke of the hour and departed likewise. She wasted no time that was not her own.

After a time Gladwin got beyond her manner and began to notice the girl. She wore black—perfectly fitting, perfectly tailored black, not always the same in style, but always the same in simplicity. The bits of white at her throat and wrists were always snowy; she exhibited no jewelry; her hair was always perfectly smooth. She was rather a plain girl, but her plainness was of the kind that lessens with acquaintance. One had to see Sara many times before one was aware that her mouth was sweet and that her skin was good in spite of its pallor.

Gladwin Stared at Her in Amazement.

Good breeding breathed from her as constantly and unobtrusively as did the fragrance of her subtle perfume. She had nothing to say about herself and after six months spent in daily contact with her, Gladwin knew no more about her than he had known the first morning she entered his office. Her complete unconsciousness of him in any other capacity than that of her employer piqued his curiosity.

Gladwin was a good-looking man, who dressed well and had plenty of wit. The few women he knew had always made much of him. Two or three of them, he felt vaguely, wanted to marry him, but not one of them was the sort of woman he cared to link his life with. To tell the truth, Gladwin had given so little time to the thought of women that he did not know the kind he preferred, but it came to him one day as he sat watching Sara at work that she pleased him better than any woman he had ever seen.

It was a light morning—no one could call it sunny, for sunshine never penetrated the windows of that particular office building, shut in as it was by larger structures—and Sara's hair showed more satiny than ever, her cheek finer of texture, her dress more immaculate.

A little sigh of sudden longing caught in Gladwin's throat and he stumbled in his dictation. That was the beginning of his falling in love with her. It was curious, too, for he had never dreamed that he would want to marry any stenographer in his employ. He had heard of such things being done and he did not approve of them. But Sara distinctly was not the ordinary type of office girl. Gladwin made up his mind that he would speak to her. But first he wanted to make a little bigger pile before he took it upon himself to support a wife.

"Do you think," he asked her one day, "that two persons can live decently in this town on $1,500 a year?"

Sara seemed to hesitate a moment before she answered quietly: "I have heard that there are people who live on very much less and yet manage to be comfortable."

Gladwin said nothing more. But the next day he asked the same question of a friend who had recently become engaged.

"Fifteen hundred a year?" More laughed. "Why, man alive, that wouldn't buy provisions, to say nothing of paying for house rent and cab hire and theater tickets and clothes." He tripped merrily over the list at the conclusion of which Gladwin looked quite downcast. More caught him by the shoulder. "Thinking of it seriously—are you, old man?"

"No—oh, no," Gladwin shook his head. "No, indeed." But he was.

It was soon after that that Gladwin began to speculate in stocks. A few trifling things came his way and he thought he had found an easier road to making money than grinding out the law at so much a case. He began to study the papers more and his law books less. Two or three times Sara had to remind him of things he had left undone.

Gladwin gradually became absorbed, a little preoccupied of manner. He sometimes caught Sara looking at him bewilderedly. One day he suddenly became buoyant, almost gay. He whistled softly, he even tried to sing—he who could not produce two consecutive notes harmoniously. That morning N. K. & Y. had gone up four points and there was every indication that it would rise still higher. Two or three times that day he was on the point of telling Sara about his success and asking her to share it; then the thought came: "No, I'll wait a little. There's time enough."

Alas! Two days later when Sara came in after lunch she found Gladwin doubled up across his desk. He looked like either a dead man or a very sick one. She went to him and shook him by the shoulder. "Mr. Gladwin!"

He looked up at her. His face was one rigid pallor. "Sara," he said, dully, "I've played the fool. I bought more N. K. & Y., and it's going down—down—" He gulped. "I'm ruined!"

She took her hand from his shoulder. She did not seem surprised. "How bad is it?" she demanded.

He drew paper and pencil toward him and began to figure. She looked on thoughtfully.

"Pretty bad, isn't it?" he queried.

"Yes, it's pretty bad."

"And the worst of it is," Gladwin went on, recklessly piling up his tribulation, "I've neglected my business lately till it has fallen off. No, that isn't the worst. The worst is that—that I had something to say to you which I can never say now. In the hope of being able to say it I went into this deal—you understand?"

Her face burst into joy as with flame. Her hand went to his shoulder again. "Yes, I understand now. But I didn't before. I thought you were doing it for—somebody else. You see, I suspected what you were up to." She spoke breathlessly. "If only you had told me!"

"Too late now, Sara."

"No, it isn't too late. Nothing is ever too late. Tell me now."

And she made him tell her. As she listened she became almost beautiful. She was altogether a different Sara by the time he had finished.

"And now I'll tell you something," she said when he had ended. "I don't have to run a typewriter. I took it up after father died because I was lonely and had to have something to do. He left me $90,000." As Gladwin stared at her in amazement she bent and laid her cheek to his. "I'll get you out of this scrape, dear," she whispered, "but don't you ever fool with stocks again as long as you live!"

PA WAS ABOVE DICTIONARIES

Knew All About Their Construction, and Daughter's Argument Went for Nothing.

"Don't say 'et,' ma—it's just as easy to say 'eaten.'"

"My stars! What next?" glared ma. "I learned to talk, Opal, afore you was born. Is it likely I'll change at this late day?"

"If Opal's goin' to be a school teacher, mebbe she wants summat to practice on," grinned her father.

"Oh, pa, you mustn't say 'summat'—it isn't a word," remonstrated his daughter.

"Ain't a word!" shouted her father, with increasing excitement. "Well, hear that! How do you know it ain't a word?"

"It isn't in the dictionary," said Opal.

"Shucks," disparaged pa, "what's the dictionary got to do with it? The words that ain't into the dictionary ain't common ta..... words nohows; they're written words—nobody puts talk into a dictionary."

"Why not?" questioned Opal, astonished at her father's apparent knowledge of the making of dictionaries.

"'Cause why? 'Cause spoken words is too lively for 'em—who can go round and keep track of every word that's spoke? I can make up a hull mouthful myself, and no dictionary 'll ever know anything about it—see?"

"But, pa—" protested Opal.

"They put written words—not spoke words, into a dictionary," again differentiated pa, rather surprised and pleased at his own remark.

"But educated people talk better than you do, anyway," maintained Opal, "whatever words they use."

"If you want to get told summat," remarked pa, deliberately using the word under discussion, "that ain't got no sense to it, git a graduated daughter to talk to you."

"And I don't see," broke in ma, heatedly, "why our pa or anybody else, can't use the words that is naturally his'n."—Everybody's Magazine.

OF MUCH VALUE TO SURGEONS

"Stomach Telescope" Has Been Found Useful in Almost Endless Variety of Ways.

The "stomach telescope," or gastroscope, invented at the London hospital, has proved to be of the greatest value in the diagnosis of stomach disorders. An eminent surgeon recently referred in the highest terms to the advances lately made at that hospital in the early detection of diseases of the stomach by means of this instrument, which will in the immediate future probably come to be part of the equipment of every up-to-date hospital. The gastroscope now enables the physician or surgeon to actually see for himself the exact condition of the whole of the interior of the stomach, the slightest ulceration, growth or other abnormality in the lining membrane being thus readily observed. To be able to do this is of the very greatest importance in suspected cancer of the stomach, where the only hope of cure lies in the eradication of the cancerous growth at the very earliest moment. This means that the increased use of the gastroscope will in the future save many lives that would other wise inevitably be lost through that disease.

Fine Fox Hunt Without Witnesses.

The East Essex hounds had a remarkable run recently. A fox which they had hunted through the village of Bradwell swam the Blackwater, and the pack followed, but the depth of water and the dangerous banks prevented the field from crossing. They had to go for two miles along the bank until they reached a bridge, and by the time they had crossed fox and pack had vanished. After a search of three hours the hounds were found ten miles from the place where they had crossed the river whimpering round a barn at Chalkey Wood, beneath which the fox had gone to earth.

Mr. R. D. Hill, the master, called the hounds off and gave the fox a respite for the splendid run he had given. "The best 50 minutes the East Essex have had this season," was the description of Cockayne, the huntsman, "although there was no one riding with the hounds and no whitness of their performance."—London Evening Standard.

For the Children.

The mother who believes in beginning the artistic education of her children at the earliest possible moment, may do a great deal in that direction with the aid of the nursery walls. The sides of the room are first papered with some plain neutral color, then divided into a frieze and panels, outlined with the darkest shade of the chosen neutral tint and upon these subdivisions are pasted brightly colored and well-drawn figures of animals and birds, which are to be obtained in the form of long sheets of wall paper, which may easily be cut out and affixed to the walls. Thus a young child may not only be taught much that is essential in regard to the proper placing of colors and their composition, but because of the questions which they will be apt to ask about the animals and birds, will acquire a great deal of valuable information about natural history.

A Desperate Subterfuge.

"Henrietta," said Mr. Meekton, "can I eat anything I find growing on a tree and still be a consistent vegetarian?"

"Certainly."

"Oh, joy! I notice that a lot of our chickens have taken to roosting in the woods."

Your tongue is coated.

Elderly People Helped Free

The last years of life are the sweetest, and yet the most difficult to prolong. It is then that the greatest care is exercised in maintaining bodily health. But the chief care should always be with regard to the food you eat and whether you are digesting it properly. You should not allow yourself to become constipated.

No doubt you have tried salts and cathartic pills, purgative tablets, etc., and have come to the conclusion that they are violent in action and do but temporary good. Listen, then, to the voice of experience with regard to a wonderful and mild laxative, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is not new, only we are trying to find new friends for it.

A. A. Felts, of Johnston City, Ill., suffered from stomach trouble for six years and found his cure in Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. His wife uses it too with success. We could name hundreds of others. Some heard of it first through neighbors or friends; others through the doctor's offer to send any sufferer from a stomach, liver or bowel complaint a free sample bottle for trial, without charge. If you will send your name and address he will send you a trial bottle direct to your home. If it proves itself as he claims then continue the treatment by buying a 50-cent or $1 bottle of your druggist, as all of them sell it. Old people, like children, should look for purity, and it is well to mention that the purity of this remedy is vouched for with the U. S. government. Also, though a free bottle is sent to prove its merits, results are always guaranteed from the regular bottles bought of druggists, who will refund your money if it does not satisfy you. Send at least for the free test bottle today.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

War Declared on Fly.

Washington.—A concerted country-wide attack is to be made on the house fly this year, according to Chief Entomologist Howard, who testified the other day before a house committee.

When spring begins hundreds of scientists, aided by laborers, drugs and chemicals and mechanical "killers," will try to drive the household pest out of existence.

Dr. Howard says the campaign will be opened in the country districts and the department will issue a farmers' bulletin giving advice as to the ills for which the flies are responsible and how to eradicate the pest.

Busy Blind Workman.

Beverly, N. J.—So nearly blind that he can scarcely distinguish daylight from darkness, James J. Carr is working at the Wall Rope works in the midst of machinery where one false step would mean his death, yet he is one of the ablest workmen in the place.

Carr has no fear of making the false step, for with an acute sense of touch he is more careful than those with good sight.

Before Carr lost his vision he was recognized as one of the best rope-makers in the business, and when he applied for his old job, although almost totally blind, the foreman hired him.

EVILS OF COTTON GAMBLING

Speculation in Product Robs Southern Farmer of $5 to $7.50 on Every Bale Raised.

The public has been facing another one of those spectacular combative feats of the bulls and bears, which has come at a time and in a way that the skeptic or unbeliever, heretofore, that speculation in farm products, and especially in futures, had nothing to do with making of prices but supply and demand directed speculation and made prices certainly has all the logic knocked out of his argument, writes W. B. Yeary, in Farm and Ranch.

We find the shortest cotton crop in many years compared with the demand for it, and a scrap in the "pit" between bulls and bears has reduced the price of spot cotton from five dollars to $7.50 per bale, and no argument, figures or statistics quoted, have one scintilla of effect on the market. The only cause that can be seen financial might on the one side trying to crush the same on the other for the purpose of gain, as in another game of gambling; and to prevent the establishment of a high level mark for cotton.

The question arises, is this a healthy condition for the business of the country to depend upon, or be governed by? Let every business man think and answer for himself, also every producer. Has this wild method of high finance injured anyone, and so, who? Will the public feel it? Let us see where some of this slump will end, and who will be affected.

In every community in the south farmers have some cotton on hand. They are hurt from five dollars to $7.50 per bale, and their merchants and banks are hurt just the same amount. In each community there are one or more cotton buyers or firms that have from a few hundred bales to a few thousand.

They have not necessarily been speculating, but their holdings represent the accumulations of recent purchases and odds and ends that could not be sold or shipped out entirely without loss in some way. In many instances these buyers are our best and most enterprising men, and in many instances the losses to-day would literally wipe them off the face of the earth, financially. They have strained every point to give all they could for the cotton; and every producer and every business interest the producer came in contact with was benefited by the price paid. Now, everyone who comes in contact with this buyer is hurt to the same proportion.

So, we see business is not only disturbed, but hurt, throughout the whole section where such products are raised.

Certainly the conditions and facts are so plain this time that doubt can no longer lingers in anyone's mind as to the baneful effects of such practices

Warning and Invitation

Sunday School Lesson for April 24, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 11:20-30. Memory verses, 28-30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Matt. 11:28.

TIME.—Luke shows us that the time was a year and a half after our last lesson, in connection with the mission of the seventy, December A. D. 29.

PLACE.—Somewhere in Perea, on the way to Jerusalem.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

Our last lesson was a discussion of doubt—honest doubt and dishonest doubt. We heard our Lord, after highly praising John, who had proved his readiness to follow the light as fast as he received it, turn with stern upbraiding to the scribes and Pharisees, who had proved themselves unwilling to receive the light, though brought to them in such different ways as by John and Christ. Our present lesson carries the same theme further, discussing the most important of all subjects, the rejection or acceptance of the Saviour.

Rejecting Christ.—When did Christ speak the words we are to study? Matthew would seem to imply that he spoke them immediately after the coming and going of the messengers from John the Baptist. But Luke (10:15-16, 21, 22) reports almost identically the same words in connection with the return of the seventy, more than a year later.

What were the cities that Christ upbraided? The cities of Galilee, "wherein most of his mighty works were done." Three are named as samples. Chorazin, probably about one mile north of the upper part of the Sea of Galilee; Bethsaida, a city situated by the Jordan where it empties into the Sea of Galilee from the north, and Capernaum, our Lord's own city, to which he removed from Nazareth, and where he wrought many mighty works.

Why did Christ reproach these cities? Because, though given so many opportunities, they had "not repented." That was why Christ preached and worked miracles, to bring men to repentance.

With what cities did Christ compare these favored towns of Galilee? With Tyre and Sidon, Phoenician cities on the Mediterranean coast to the northwest. Sidon was a very ancient city, and Tyre, its offspring, was in Christ's day the chief commercial city of Palestine, and probably the largest, next to Jerusalem. Also with Sodom, the city on the Dead Sea destroyed with Gomorrah in the days of Abraham.

Receiving Christ.—Vs. 25-27. Christ then passed from denunciation and warning to joyful thanksgiving. What was the occasion of the transition? "At that time" should be translated (R. V.) "at that season." Luke connects the following words with the return of the seventy; they are a prayer of rejoicing over the favorable reception accorded them. Perhaps the same thoughts were uttered on the return of the twelve (see v. 1 of this chapter 2 of Matthew).

Peace in Christ.—Vs. 28-30. We have studied the picture of those that reject Christ and the picture of those that accept him. The great discourse closes with a famous picture of the condition of those that will accept Christ, that will hear and heed his loving invitation.

To whom is Christ's invitation addressed? In the first place, to "all." There was need for the insertion of that wide word. Had not the Saviour said a little before, "Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent"?—Spurgeon. In the second place, to all "that labor and are heavy laden." This describes the burdens of humanity both actively and passively,—those that are worn by ceaseless toil, and those that in silence and obscurity are bearing loads that no one knows about, are alike invited to Jesus. The poor under the load of poverty, sinners under the weight of guilt, business men staggering under heavy responsibilities,—all are included in the precious invitation. "All men are miserable; all men are 'by nature the children of wrath'; all men are laboring in the vain pursuit of earthly happiness; all, therefore, may consider themselves invited."—Prof. Archibald Alexander.

What are these weary ones invited to do? Simply to "come" to Jesus. The Greek is stronger than our English, and is, literally, "Hither to me, all weary and burdened!"

And the result of going to Jesus is—? "I will give you rest."

But what is this rest that Christ will give? We usually stop here, and lose the force of the message. "In the first verse the Physician opens his door to receive his patients; in the following verses he prescribes for them. To take the one part of the utterance without the remainder of it is like going to a great doctor and coming away again only to fling his prescription into the fire."—Principal Adeney. The rest that Christ gives consists of (1) discipleship, "Learn of me," and (2) "Take my yoke upon you."

The best help is not to bear the troubles of others for them, but to inspire them with courage and energy to bear their burdens for themselves and meet the difficulties of life bravely.—Lubbock.

"Perhaps to-day nothing is more necessary than to maintain the protest of personal convictions against the bold and large assumption of science and philosophy."

Man's riches are to be estimated rather by the fewness of his wants than the greatness of his possessions.

SAVE FRUIT FLAVOR

Precooling Plants to End Process of Picking Green Article.

Chicago Market Will Soon Receive Citrous Products, with Original Taste Preserved, It Is Declared.

Chicago.—Those who live far from Pacific slopes are about to learn what California fruit is like. A rare treat, soon to cast aside its rarity and become an every-day delight, is promised Chicago epicures.

True, the California peach, the California orange and the California grape are not unknown, by name at least, to the breakfast tables of this city. But the California flavor—aye, there's the rub!—never has crossed the sandy wastes and the Rocky mountains.

But it is the flavor, along with the fruit, that Chicago is now to appropriate on a commercial scale. Then, too, there will be Hawaiian pineapples and other strange products of remote farms and orchards, practically unknown, that fruit venders will offer most any time that the enterprising housewife wants a little variety.

Up to the present time, save in an experimental way, the fruits of the far west have been plucked green—a veritable emerald green, at that—and shipped overland on a bruising journey from which they emerged so unlike their natural state that a native Californian never would know them in the world, they say.

But that has been changed. A few days ago a railroad company opened in Roseville, Cal., a $350,000 precooling plant that is counted upon to contribute largely toward the miracle just indicated. In a short time another precooling plant, erected at a cost of $450,000, will be opened at Colton, Cal., and the trans-shipment of ripe fruit from both northern and southern California by the precooling method will have adequate facilities.

Railroad officials explain that this precooling device is the fireless cooker turned inside out. The economical housekeeper, they explain, starts a pot to boiling, transfers it to a carefully insulated oven and, since the heat cannot escape, it just goes on boiling.

The shipper of fruit, reversing this process, gets his fruit thoroughly cooled off, puts it in a car insulated against heat and takes it out at the journey's end as cool and fresh as he put it in. He does compromise when his car is to cross hot sage brush deserts, by putting some ice in the car, but for the shorter distances the ice is quite superfluous, it is said.

AUSTRIA IN WAR ON SNAKES

New Additions to Empire Is Overrun with Reptiles—Measures to Exterminate.

London.—Austria's new territory is undesirably rich in snakes, mostly of the poisonous varieties, and the government is taking vigorous measures to exterminate them.

In the ten years from 1896 to 1905 the average yearly death roll from snake bites in Bosnia and Herzegovina was 13 persons, and 1,338 head of cattle, horses and domestic animals. Besides this, hundreds of persons were bitten by snakes but recovered.

Since 1906 the provincial authorities have given money premiums for the killing of snakes. In that year 30,056 dead snakes were brought in, of which 25,438 were poisonous. Next year, when the official reward system became more generally known, these figures increased enormously, no fewer than 280,718 snakes being killed, including 271,685 poisonous.

Last year's figures were very nearly the same, and it will be some years before the work of extermination can be anything like completed. But at the same time the number of persons reported bitten by poisonous snakes seems to be steadily decreasing—206 in 1907 and 140 last year.

MEDICINE RECEIVED BY TON

Minnesota Farmer Given Agency for Drug House Is Asked to Pay $8,000 for Goods.

Olivia, Minn.—Last November a dapper young man appeared and arranged with M. E. Olsen, a farmer, to take the agency for a medicine house, and papers were drawn up whereby the house was to supply its agent with a medicine wagon, provided he took a certain amount of the medicine. Everything went smoothly until last week, when several tons of medicine appeared. At about the same time it is said that a claim for $8,000 came to hand against the Olsens for collection. The consignees have refused to accept the goods or to pay the claim.

Water Oddly Seductive.

Chester, Pa.—For several days past there was quite a run on a barrel of water at the Penn steel casting works. On account of a large number of the workmen becoming ill from drinking the salty city water the company substituted spring water. An empty whisky barrel was secured from a local firm and the change seemed to work like a charm. The fascinating influence about the barrel finally drew the attention of the officials of the plant, who, on examination, found that sufficient whisky had been left in the receptacle to give the spring water a most seductive palatableness.

NOT THEIR TIME TO DIE

Wonderful Escape of Shipwrecked Sailors After Their Vessel Had Been Sunk.

Those who go down to the sea in ships and do business in the great waters have had some fearful and wonderful experiences. In a wreck which occurred off the coast of Jamaica, the members of the crew were rescued in a remarkable manner. After their ship, a Glasgow sailing vessel, had broken up, nine of them clung to a rock which stood only four feet out of the water, and which was only four feet in length. With raging seas washing over them, holding a wounded comrade on their shoulders, they clung for 20 long hours to their only hope. And then some fishermen, at the risk of their lives, went to their rescue and brought them off in safety.

The second mate had an even more wonderful escape. He placed two bundles of wood under his arms in order that he might float, but he was the plaything of the waves, which tossed him between two pinnacles of rock, where he became jammed.

There seemed no possibility of food, but subsequently he had the good fortune to pick up six cases of prepared oatmeal, a tin of mustard and a cask of water which had floated miraculously from the wreck. He lived on the oatmeal, mustard and water for six days, at the end of which time he, too, was sighted and saved.

Causes for Tuberculosis.

Walter Sands Mills takes up the question of tuberculosis as a disease that does not attack healthy lungs in persons not predisposed, and is often recovered from, as is shown by autopsies. The causes that predispose to it aside from heredity are whatever reduce the vital force and resistance. The greatest ravages of the disease occur in the prime of life, when all the energies are in use for the struggle for existence. Domestic service predisposes women more than any other cause; inhalation of mineral and metallic dust, breathing devitalized air, other lung diseases, traumatism to the lungs, bad habits of living and unhygienic workshops all predispose to it. Prevention of the disease consists in keeping up the vitality of children and protecting them against infection.—Medical Record.

Consider Your Health.

The symptoms of a disordered Liver are sallow complexion, coated tongue, loss of appetite, biliousness headache, etc. These indicate that serious sickness is approaching. A recognized remedy for these disorders is GRANGER'S LIVER REGULATOR. It removes all bilious accumulations, stimulates the kidneys to throw off injurious accumulations, increases the appetite and insures good health. Never allow yourself to become bilious. Keep the old standard GRANGER'S LIVER REGULATOR in the home and use it when necessary. Price at druggists, 25 cents to consolidated tin boxes.

New German Horseshoe.

A new German horseshoe, designed to prevent slipping on ashpalt and wood-block pavements, has a countersunk groove, in which is inserted a piece of hemp rope. The rope can be readily replaced, and as it alone comes into contact with the slippery pavement, the horse secures a very sure footing. Consul Gen. R. P. Skinner reports that the shoe is making considerable headway in Hamburg.

Enjoy Good Health.

To enjoy good health keep the liver in good condition, otherwise the effete matter and bile will accumulate in the system and cause disease.

St. Joseph's Liver Regulator

(Liquid and Powders)

is old-established, reliable, thoroughly endorsed, and is specially recommended for use in all disorders of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

It has become popular and indispensable in a great many homes as a valuable systemic Regulator and Invigorator.

It is pleasant to take, purely vegetable, and will benefit if taken as directed.

It relieves Biliousness, Headache, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Sallow skin and all disorders caused by Constipation and torpidity of the Liver and Kidneys.

It should be in every home and used by all travelers.

Its timely use will often save expensive and painful spells of sickness, and give joy and health instead of pain and despondency.

Price, liquid per bottle, 50 cents. Powdered, per box, 25 cents. Druggists and general merchants sell it, or send to us. Sample of powders and booklet sent free on application. Address,

In Memory.

On March 30th, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Frith and took from them their loving, spirited son Mr. Monroe Frith.

He was sick only a few days when the good Lord saw fit to call him from home in this world to that above where there is no more sickness nor sorrow. He was an obedient son and a kind friend to all who came in contact with him Don't weep, dear parents, friends and relatives, for we feel assured that dear Monroe is at rest, and our loss is heaven's gain. Monroe joined Mr. Carmel church about one year ago and was a constant member of the church and Sunday school. We will miss him, yes, we will miss him everywhere, but we can not call him back to us. We can only live to meet him in that sweet beyond where we can dwell together for ever more and have no more pains, sickness or sorrow.

Dear parents, we don't feel that we could say a word to ease your aching heart or fill the vacancy of this dear one; we can only point you to the Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ and ask you to be ready to meet dear Monroe in that sweet home.

"There is a reaper whose name is death,
And with his sickle keen
He reaps the bearded grain at a breath,
And the flowers that grow between."

His remains were laid to rest in Mt. Carmel cemetery where it will wait for the resurrection day, when he will stand before the pretty white throne.

Evergreen.

Editor Banner:—Just a few words please. There is a time for all things, time to work and to play, but the sad time is to part. Our school at this place closed Friday afternoon. We sure had a successful school and we are sorry to see Prof. Williams leave us for we all know he will be missed not only in the school room but in Sunday school for he sure is a good Sunday school worker and a good christian man and faithful at his work, what ever it be. He is a man that I think the boys can pattern after and not make any mistake. Prof. Williams has left our community but we are sure not to forget him; he is ever welcome back. He is a man that is ever ready to help any one if it is in his power to do so. Of course it is hard for a teacher to please every one, but I think he pleased every one. You are most sure to have some ups and downs of a teacher, but I think it was all ups for Prof. Williams. I never heard a wrong word about him in my life, he carries a good name where ever he goes.

Mr. Clyde Scott of Birmingham paid his parents a flying visit Sunday.

Miss Nelia Johnson came down to be at the close of school and staid over until Monday. She came to Sunday school and made a fine talk on the work. She had the pleasure of attending the state Sunday school convention at Mobile and had some good remarks for us. We were glad indeed to have her with us. Miss Johnson is another good Sunday school worker. We wish Prof. Williams and Miss Johnson much success all through life, they have started out with a great work before them.

We also had several of the patrons of the school with us Friday evening. Mr. A. F. Duffy gave us a fine talk. A SCHOOL GIRL.

That neighborly feeling heard of so frequently, is usually one of curiosity and envy.

Shiloh.

The community was saddened on last Thursday night when the death angel visited the home of Mr. T. J. Billingsley and took his loving wife. She had been sick about 20 days with fever. She leaves a husband, six sons, four daughters and a dear mother, Mrs. Mandy Owen, and three brothers and a host of friends to mourn her loss. It seems so hard to give her up, she was so kind to all whom she came in touch with. I do not feel that I can say one word that would be consoling to the dear ones that are left behind, but only point them to Him who doeth all things well. If they will only put their trust in Him they will surely meet that dear wife and mother in heaven. We know that it is indeed sad in that home, but weep not, dear ones, for your loss is heaven's gain. She can not come to you, but you can go to her if you will only follow the example she has set for you while was living. Oh, it is so sad, so sad. I extend to the bereaved family my heart felt sympathy and pray that they may be comforted by the holy spirit, and be willing to say the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord. This dear sister had been a member of Shiloh Baptist church for a number of years.

ALABAMA STATE Fair.

Birmingham, October 6-15, 1910, To the Biggest and Best Yet. Magnificent Agricultural Premiums.

The Alabama State Fair is issuing its preliminary premium list in order to give the farmers ample time to plant and prepare to compete for the splendid premiums they will meet in all lines of agriculture this year. Jefferson county will not be allowed to compete with the other counties of the State for the county exhibit premium. Special premiums have been provided for the best agricultural exhibit from Jefferson county. This is deemed fair in order that the other counties will not have to compete against Jefferson for the county prizes.

The prizes for corn and fruit displays are larger than ever offered by any Fair in the South, and are practically quadruple what they were last year.

The management is arranging for amusement features on even a greater scale than last year. The list of nerve thrilling acts, the first music, the most magnificent fire works and splendid races will be provided, and everything done to make the Fair this year the most successful ever held. When it is remembered that Birmingham had the best State Fair last year of any place in the South, one can imagine on what a grand scale the Fair will be conducted this year. Some of the agricultural premiums offered are as follows:

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

The "oldest inhabitant" can recollect nothing like the cold weather we have been having lately, and whether it is due to Halley's comet or some other cause the oldest inhabitant does not know. Monday morning, April 25, 1910 will long be remembered for the biggest fall of snow we have seen in several years but (like the Clanton Record) it did not "come to stay" but melted as soon as it touched the ground.

Frosts, for two or three nights in succession, are playing havoc with agricultural interests; we hear of corn having been killed, and while not a great deal of cotton has been planted in this vicinity, most of it will have to be replanted, and seed is said to be scarce. Fruit and vegetables have suffered and the total damage yet remains to be seen.

On the eve of the primary a brief review of the situation will not be amiss.

Beginning at the top, the race for the governorship has not apparently aroused the enthusiasm of the voters to any great degree. This may be accounted for by the fact that voters have long since made up their minds as to which candidate they were going to support.

The Hon. Emmett O'Neal, champion of the masses, we believe will receive a big majority of the vote cast, and Chilton will do itself the credit of helping swell the majority. Perry Thomas will doubtless be the nominee for Lieut. Governor.

The race for the Senatorship has been rather warmly contested, and in our opinion Senator Bankhead will again be victorious.

The genial Reuben F. Kolb stands a good show for becoming Commissioner of Agriculture.

Chief Justice Dowdell will again fill the position he now ably occupies.

For Railroad Commissioner Major Hamburger and Frank N. Julian appear to be the two most eligible candidates.

Charles H. Greer is certain to be Secretary of State.

For the District Judgeship, we believe Judge W. W Pearson has so ably filled the office, will be renominated and the [illegible] ship is a very open race between D. D. Askew and F. Loy [illegible]

In Chilton county E. B. [illegible] for Probate Judge, H. M. [illegible] for Circuit Clerk, G. D. Rutherford and E. H. Hayes for Commissioner having no opposition, will of course receive the nomination.

The race for the sheriffalty has excited the most attention among the four contestants it is hard to say which will be the successful one. Taking them in the order in which their announcements were made, Lee Hayes may be expected to make a good showing. M. Morgan has many friends who hope to see him get the nomination. J. H. Catts is in the race to the finish, and Bowen L. Jones, the last to enter, may astonish some of us by coming in first.

It is to be hoped there will be a good vote polled in order to make a good showing for the election in November.

Do not forget to vote an Allgood ticket for State Auditor.

Save your vote by voting for C. Allgood, for State Auditor.

Remember that Allgood's name comes first for Auditor.

Every good Democrat will vote next Monday.

If you are with us, vote!

VOL. XVIII CLANTON, ALA., THURSDAY, APRIL 28, 1910 No. 30

Prattville.

On April 2 the death angel visited the home of Mr. Joe Cook and bore his soul away from earth. He left a wife and children and a host of friends to mourn his loss. He had been sick for a long time, but at last he gave up to die.

Our Sunday school is doing fine, but if everybody would go to Sunday school it would be much better.

I would like to know how Annie Dinah is getting on this spring. We haven't heard from her in a long time. I will now ring off.

Saved From The Grave.

"Had about given up hope, after nearly four years of suffering from a severe lung trouble," writes Mrs. M. L. Hay, of Talleville, Tenn. "Often the pain in my chest would be almost unbearable and I could not do any work, but Dr. King's New Discovery has made me feel like a new person. It's the best medicine made for throat and lungs." Obstinate coughs, stubborn colds, hay fever, la grippe, asthma, croup, bronchitis and hemorrhages, due to severe coughs and whooping cough, yield quickly to this wonderful medicine. Try it. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by Upchurch Drug co.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of an execution issued out of the Chancery Court of Jefferson county, Alabama, and to me directed, whereby I am commanded to make the amount of a certain judgment or decree recently obtained against Thomas E. Lapsley and others out of the goods, chattels, lands and tenements of the said Thomas E. Lapsley and others, I have executed upon the following described real estate as the property of the said Thomas E. Lapsley, to-wit:

The ne 1-4 and n ½ of sw ¼ and sw 1-4 of sw 1-4 of Section 11; nw ¼ of se 1-4 of Section 14 of ne 1-4 and e ½ of sw 1-4 of Section 15; the se 1-4 of se 1-4 of Section 16; the e ½ of ne 1-4, and nw 1-4 of ne 1-4 and ne 1-4 of nw 1-4 of Section 21; the w ½ of nw 1-4 of ne 1-4 and ne 1-4 of ne 1-4 and n ½ of nw 1-4 of ne 1-4, and s ½ of se 1-4 of Section 17; the w ½ of ne 1-4 and ne 1-4 of ne 1-4 and se 1-4 of nw 1-4 and sw 1-4 of nw 1-4 of Section 22; the w ½ of nw 1-4 and w ½ of sw 1-4 of Section 23; the e ½ of ne 1-4 and ne 1-4 of se 1-4 and e ½ of nw 1-4 and sw 1-4 of nw 1-4 of Section 26. All of said lands lying in Township 21 of Range 14 in Chilton county, Alabama.

Therefore according to said command I did expose for sale, at public outcry to the highest bidder and interest the above named Thomas E. Lapsley had in the above described lands on Monday, the 18th day of April 1910, during the legal hours of sale, at the court House door in Clanton, Chilton county, Alabama.

Dated at Clanton, Alabama, this the 5th day of March 1910.

The foregoing sale under execution against Thomas E. Lapsley and others on this day continued to take place on the 25th day of April, 1910, in all respects as first above advertised except as to the day of sale.

This 18th day of April, 1910.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

The "oldest inhabitant" can recollect nothing like the cold weather we have been having lately, and whether it is due to Halley's comet or some other cause the same oldest inhabitant does not know. Monday morning, April 25, 1910, will long be remembered for the biggest fall of snow we have seen in several years but (like the Clanton Record) it did not "come to stay" but melted as soon as it touched the ground.

Frosts, for two or three nights in succession, are playing havoc with agricultural interests; we hear of corn having been killed, and while not a great deal of cotton has been planted in this vicinity, most of it will have to be replanted, and seed is said to be scarce. Fruit and vegetables have suffered and the total damage yet remains to be seen.

On the eve of the primary a brief review of the situation will not be amiss.

Beginning at the top, the race for the governorship has not apparently aroused the enthusiasm of the voters to any great degree. This may be accounted for by the fact that voters have long since made up their minds as to which candidate they were going to support.

The Hon. Emmett O'Neal, champion of the masses, we believe will receive a big majority of the votes cast, and Chilton will do itself the credit of helping swell the majority. Perry Thomas will doubtless be the nominee for Lieut. Governor.

The race for the Senatorship has been rather warmly contested, and in our opinion Senator Bankhead will again be victorious.

The genial Reuben F. Kolb stands a good show for becoming Commissioner of Agriculture.

Chief Justice Dowdell will again fill the position he now ably occupies.

For Railroad Commissioner Max Hamburger and Frank N. Julian appear to be the two most eligible candidates.

Charles H. Greer is certain to be Secretary of State.

For the District Judgeship, we believe Judge W. W. Pearson who has so ably filled the office, will be renominated and the Solicitorship is a very open race between L. D. Askew and F. Loyd Tate.

For Chilton county E. B. Deason for Probate Judge, H. M. Simpson for Circuit Clerk, G. D. Retherford and E. H. Hayes for Commissioners, having no opposition, will of course receive the nomination.

The race for the shrievalty has excited the most attention and among the four contestants it is hard to say which will be the successful one. Taking them in the order in which their annoucements were made, Lee Hayes may be expected to make a good showing. J. M. Morgan has many friends who hope to see him get the nomination. J. H. Catts is in the race to the finish, and Bowen L. Jones, the last to enter, may astonish some of us by coming in first.

It is to be hoped there will be a good vote polled in order to make a good showing for the election in November.

Do not forget to vote an Allgood ticket for State Auditor.

Save your vote by voting for J. C. Allgood, for State Auditor.

Remember that Allgood's name comes first for Auditor.

Every good Democrat will vote next Monday.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Maplesville, Ala., April 22, 1910

Editor Banner:—I do not want to object to any person's position as regards the different candidates for county offices, but I think that some of your correspondents have placed Mr. B. L. Jones in a wrong position. His friends here have exacted no promises, neither has he made any declaration as to whom he would support for any other office, and the coupling of his name with that of Deason for Judge or Mallory for Governor does him an injustice, though innocently done by friends. If I understand Mr. Jones' position, he is simply a candidate for Sheriff, trusting alone to his own merits, and would be grateful for the support of both O'Neal and Mallory men, reserving the right of every citizen to make his own choice as to other candidates.

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space. I haven't seen anything from this place in a long time. Farmers are feeling rather blue, as it has been snowing; everything looks to be killed. Most of them are through planting.

Mr. S. B. Smith got married Easter Sunday. Hope him a long and happy life.

The school at this place is dead. The people wouldn't try to keep it. Well, my letter is getting rather lengthy, I will close with best wishes to the Banner and its many readers.

THE AUDITORIUM, SOLDIERS' HOME.

Memorial Day, last Sunday, will long be remembered by the gallant old veterans, the biggest crowd that has ever visited the Home in one day being present. Over one thousand visitors graced the occasion, it is estimated last Sunday.

The graves of those who have gone before were prettily and tastefully decorated with fragrant blossoms, whose incense rose on high.

The auditorium was packed to the limit, many being unable to obtain admission, when Hon. J. Ormond Middleton made the address of the day in a well chosen and appropriate speech.

The old soldiers were highly gratified at the interest shown in their welfare by the numerous visitors and the hope was freely expressed that they would again enjoy another such day as was this Memorial Day.

This Institute, composed of a group of regularly graduated physicians and surgeons, licensed, legally chartered and incorporated under the laws of the State of Ohio, sends at its own expense these eminent medical specialists in order to introduce the newest methods and discoveries in medicine and surgery, such as the system of treatment under X rays Violet ray, Finsen ray, Hydrotherapy, Etc., to give to those who call on the above date, consultation, examination, advice and all medicines required to complete a cure, absolutely free. These specialists will diagnose your case and give you the benefit of their skill and medical knowledge.

There is in this case no experimenting or guess work at your expense. You will be told whether you can be cured or not. If your case is curable they will put you under treatment immediately; if incurable they will give you such advice as may prolong your life. Their treatment always gives quick relief, and ultimately positively cures. Being prepared to cope with each individual case the human system is thoroughly cleansed of the disease in a natural and direct manner, and improvement is noticed at once; even the worst cases are treated without any inconvenience to the patient or the pursuing of his or her daily vocation.

If you are improving under your family physician, do not come and take up their valuable time, as they absolutely refuse to treat any one who is under the care of the local physicians. They wish besides to give each patient plenty of time and their undivided attention, but can not listen to long stories not pertaining to your trouble. They have discarded the old methods and remedies used for ages by the medical world, and which it would be folly to depend upon any longer, for they are not known to cure, as thousands die, depending on them for relief. The following list of diseases only are taken under treatment, to-wit: Diseases of the Nervous System, Heart, Stomach, Lungs, Kidneys, Catarrh, (purulent or dry), Consumption, Epilepsy, Deafness, Diseases of Women, Tumors, Pseudo Cancers, Piles, of a Chronic Nature only. They treat Deafness by an entirely new method, and hearing in many cases is restored at once. Catarrh in all its varied forms, like other diseases if once taken under treatment, is cured permanently to remain so and to never return. It matters not whom you have seen, or with whom treated, do not fail to call, as a visit will cost you nothing, and may restore you to health, or even save or prolong your life, as thousands of persons will testify by unassailable testimonials in all parts of the country. If you suspect Kidney Trouble, bring a two ounce bottle of your Urine for chemical and microscopical analysis.

REMEMBER:—The free offer is during this visit only, and will not be repeated. Persons commencing treatment upon their future visits will be required to pay, but not one cent will be asked from those commencing treatment during this visit for any medicine necessary to effect a cure, irrespective of your position in life, or the number of those who come on above date. Whomsoever, or by whom wanted, a positive guarantee to cure will be given under their system of treatment. Those having long standing and complicated disease, who have failed to get well and become discouraged, are particularly invited to call.

NOTICE: — Married ladies without their HUSBANDS, and minors without their FATHERS, will positively not be admitted to consultation unless accompanied by one of their local physicians.

MARK TWAIN DIES

Noted Humorist and Philosopher Has Passed Away.

DEATH WAS QUITE PEACEFUL

At the Bedside When the Soul of the Great Writer Took Its Flight Were Only His Daughter, Her Husband, the Doctors and Nurses.

Redding, Conn.—Samuel Langhorn Clemens ("Mark Twain") died painlessly at 6:20 o'clock Thursday of angina pectoris. He lapsed into coma at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and never recovered consciousness. It was the end of a man overwhelmed by grief and acute agony of body.

At the Death Bed.

At the death bed were only Mrs. Gabrilowitsch (Clara Clemens), her husband, Dr. Robert Halsey, Dr. Quintard, Mr. Paine and the two trained nurses.

Angina pectoris is a paroxysmal affection of the chest of baffling and obscure origin, characterized by severe pain, faintness and deep depression of the spirits.

SAMUEL L. CLEMENS

But Mark Twain did not die in anguish. Relatives soothed his pain, but in his moments of consciousness the mental depression persisted. On the way up from Bermuda he said to Albert Bigelow Paine, who had been his constant companion in illness:

"This [illegible] will never pull through with me."

On shore once more and longing for the serenity of the New England hills he took heart and said to those who noted his enfeeblement in sorrow:

"Give me a breath of Redding air once more and this will pass."

But it did not pass, and tired of body and weary of spirit the old warrior against shams and snobs said faintly to his nurses:

"Why do you fight to keep me alive? Two days of life are as good to me as five."

Last of Literary Work.

The last bit of literary work he did was a chapter of his unfinished autobiography describing his daughter Jean's death.

LASHED BY BLIZZARD.

Middle West Has Been In Grasp of Severe Storm.

Chicago.—The eastward-moving storm manifested Saturday in rain and high winds, developed snow and freezing temperatures in the western lake region and in the upper Mississippi valley.

In the fruit belts of northern Indiana, western Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota and Wisconsin, budding fruit was damaged to the extent of millions of dollars, according to reports from the sections affected.

At Buffalo, Chicago, Milwaukee, Dubuque and other cities in the path of the storm the thermometer dropped 22 to 28 degrees overnight.

Lake Michigan was lashed into a fury. The Goodrich Line steamer Iowa was washed ashore between Kenosha and Racine, Wis., but was reported in no danger. Her passenger list was small.

Because of the blinding snow and the howling of the gale, the steamer City of Benton Harbor, bound from Benton Harbor, Mich., to Chicago, was unable to sight the harbor here, her ice-crusted hulk showing inside the river several hours late.

Snow In Atlanta.

Atlanta.—During Sunday night a heavy fall of snow occurred in Atlanta, covering the housetops with a mantle of white. The ground being too warm, the snow melted as fast as it fell. Such weather for so late in the season has the oldest inhabitant puzzled.

Missing Tug Comes to Port.

Galveston, Tex.—The tug Della, reported in dispatches from Morgan City, La., as overdue from Galveston, with a tow of two barges, has arrived at Sabine Pass. She had blown out a cylinder head, which was the cause of the delay.

Receiver for Morse's Property.

New York.—Justice Blanchard has appointed Frank Hendrix the receiver of all property and effects of Charles W. Morse, banker, who is serving a fifteen years' sentence in the federal prison at Atlanta, Ga.

READY FOR VETERANS.

Mobile in Brilliant Attire to Welcome Old Soldiers.

Mobile, Ala.—Mobile has taken on her gay and brilliant attire and her rich array of bunting is far superior and eclipses anything that the Gulf City has ever before shown to the thousands that have at numerous times been within her gates. The Mardi Gras festivities have been grand in splendor and magnificent in the mart, but during the reunion Mobile will stand like a monstrous fire-light.

The decorations in honor of the reunion are in place. The crowns are with the beautiful many-colored electric garlands of electric bulbs are ready to shed their brilliant lights and the marble columns around Bienville Square and the fountain remind one of the palmy days of Rome.

Five residences are hid with the floating colors so dear to the Confederates, intern ingling with the national colors.

Reunion rates on all railroads are in effect and people within a radius of 400 miles are benefited by the reduced rate. Special trains are beginning to arrive from all points of the compass.

Chairman Bloch, of the entertainment committee of sponsors and maids, has made public the entertainment program for the Veterans and Sons of Veterans, which will keep the visitors going for several days.

TAFT STANDS FIRM.

If the Country Wants Him He Will Run for a Second Term.

Washington.—Recent speculation in regard to President Taft's intention as to another term in the white house led several of his friends to declare there was no truth in the reports that he was inclined to shrink from further service in the position as chief executive. His present attitude is described as a full determination to go ahead and run his administration as he deems best for the country. Republican leaders who have talked with him recently say that if at the end of his first term the Republican party feels like calling upon him again, even if it is apparent that he is to go down to defeat, he will accept; and if it doesn't he will retire, with the satisfaction of knowing that he has done what he believes to be best.

Another indication of President Taft's intention to run his administration, regardless of popular clamor, is found by his friends in his fixed determination to stand by Secretary of the Interior Ballinger as long as Ballinger desires to remain in his cabinet.

WAS SHE MURDERED?

Body of American Girl Found on Beach at Naples.

Naples.—The finding of the body of a beautiful young woman on the beach near here has given rise to the suspicion of murder. Apparently the woman died about three days ago. The body was scantily clothed and this has led the authorities to believe that probably she was the victim of crime.

The body was identified by the proprietor of the Hotel Castello as that of Miss Costella Reid, supposed to have been an American, who was a guest at the hotel. She was fair and tall with gray eyes and quite prominent nose, and wore eyeglasses. The supposition that she came from the United States was strengthened when the police found letters addressed to her from New York and St. Louis, as well as from Canada. Several of these apparently were love letters.

For the last few months Miss Reid had spent her time variously at Lindau, Germany; Turin, Milan, Piza and Siana. She proceeded from the latter place to Naples and went to the Hotel Castello.

CHINESE UPRISING.

Reported That Hundreds Have Been Killed In Hunan Province.

Hankow.—Hundreds have been killed in the native uprising in Hunan province, according to the stories of missionaries, who, in rags and wearied by hazardous journeys on foot, reached here. The disorder that started at Chang Sha, where three missions and the consulates were burned, is spreading rapidly. Several missions are cut off and the safety of the missionaries is doubtful. The Chinese troops have proved incapable of suppressing the riots, though 3,000 are in Chang Sha alone. Telegraph wires are cut and alarming reports come from the western part of the province. Many missions have not been heard from. Gunboats lying off Chang Sha have their guns trained on the city, according to the refugees, but they are menaced by flaming, oil-soaked junks set adrift by the rioters.

Heavy Toll of Death.

Washington.—During the three months ending December 31, 1909, there were 1,099 persons killed and 22,491 persons injured on railroads, according to a bulletin issued by the interstate commerce commission. This is an increase of 301 killed and 5,465 injured, as compared with the previous year. On electric lines 26 were killed and 642 injured. The accidents on steam roads numbered 3,206.

OUTRAGEOUS CRIME

Negro Highwaymen Kill Motorman, Wound Conductor.

LARGE REWARD IS OFFERED

In Lonely Section of Suburbs of Atlanta Motorman and Conductor of Trolley Line Attacked by Negro Highwayman.

Atlanta.—One of the boldest and most outrageous crimes in the history of Atlanta was perpetrated Saturday night when three negro highwaymen surrounded a Ponce De Leon avenue street car at the end of the line in Druid Hills park, 5 miles from the heart of the city, shot and killed Motorman S. Thomas Brown, fatally shot Conductor W. H. Bryson, and escaped after robbing them of their money, about fifty dollars in cash and two watches.

The bodies of the dead motorman and dying conductor, both of whom were alone with their car at the time of the shooting, were discovered 20 minutes after the crime by the crew on the next car out.

The robbery was one of the boldest in the history of Atlanta and has created the greatest indignation. If the perpetrators of the crime are caught during the present excitement of the people short shrift may be accorded them.

A reward of $1,000 has been offered by the Georgia Railway and Electric Company, through General Manager W. H. Glenn, for the arrest with evidence to convict, of the parties who committed the crime.

Conductor Bryson gave an account of the crime while lying on the operating table at the hospital.

A reward of $1,825 has been offered for the capture of the negroes.

$10,000 AS COMPROMISE.

Alabaman Wins Suit Against Wholesale Grocers' Association.

Birmingham, Ala.—Hinton G. Clabaugh, who sued J. A. Van Hoose, as president of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association, for $130,000 for alleged restraint of trade, has received $10,000 as a compromise, it is reported here. The settlement was made on January 21 and kept secret.

Mr. Clabaugh said that it did not affect a suit instituted in the Federal court against the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association, but simply released Mr. Van Hoose and others as individuals from any liability in the Federal suit which was instituted under the Sherman act.

Both suits have been watched with interest all over the country. It being averred by Mr. Clabaugh that he was forced out of business because he endeavored to handle goods not supplied by the Wholesale Grocers' Association.

$80,000 FIRE LOSS.

Spartan Inn, at Spartanburg, S. C., Is Destroyed by Fire.

Spartanburg, S. C.—The Spartan Inn hotel has been burned to the ground. Flames had made great headway when discovered, and it was impossible for the fire company to check them. There were about 100 guests in the building at the time of the fire, but all escaped.

G. S. Davis had a marvelous escape from the third story window by climbing down the ladder. Shouts of bell boys failed to awaken him.

The loss is estimated at $80,000, with about $12,000 insurance. G. P. Beck, policeman, was awarded $50 for saving a lady's trunk. The officer heroically re-entered the burning building and got the trunk amid smoke that was so dense it was almost impossible to see his way.

TO THE ATLANTA PEN.

Yeggmen Fined $6,000 and Given Sentences of Ten Years Each.

Richmond, Va.—Eddie Fay and "Little Dick" Harris, charged with the robbery of the Richmond post office, pleaded guilty before Judge Waddill in the United States circuit court and were fined $6,000 each and sentenced to ten years in the Federal prison at Atlanta.

Town Falls From Water Wagon.

Gary, Ind.—Pursuant to the will of the majority, Gary, the new steel city, will plunge headforemost from the water wagon next week. That the transition from a "dry" to a "wet" town will be to the accompaniment of a mighty splash, is indicated by the fact that 160 saloon licenses have been applied for, and the demand is still active. Unable to get a site elsewhere, George Opradovich has built a saloon on stilts in the middle of a swamp.

JUDGE MULQUEEN.

Before Whom Walter Pleaded Not Guilty For Slaying Ruth Wheeler.

DEATH CHAIR FOR WOLTER.

Law Avenges the Brutal Murder of Little Ruth Wheeler.

New York.—Albert Walter, a degenerate youth of 19 years, who gloated over lewd pictures and was "crazy" about women, must die in the electric chair for the murder of Ruth Wheeler, a pretty 15-year-old stenographer. After only one hour and fifty minutes of deliberation, a jury in the court of special sessions, found him guilty of murder in the first degree, bringing to a close a trial marked by its swift movement and its testimony of horror.

The boy's counsel said with eloquence that Walter was too tenderhearted to harm a cat, but twelve men decided that he strangled Ruth Wheeler and thrust her, while yet alive, in his fireplace, where, soaked with oil, her crumpled body writhed and burned.

With the same wax-faced indifference that he had shown throughout the trial, Walter evinced no emotion when the verdict was announced. With almost inhuman complacency he had been asleep in his cell—and sleeping soundly—while the jury was deliberating on his fate. This was made known by a court attendant who said that he had to rouse the prisoner to bring him into court. He will be sentenced on Wednesday.

THEY WERE BADLY BURNED

Full List of Casualties in Late Mulga Mine Horror Will Probably Total Forty-Five—Calamity Was One of the Worst in History of Alabama.

Birmingham, Ala.—Twenty-two bodies have been recovered from the mines at Mulga, where one of the most disastrous explosions in years occurred on Wednesday night, April 20th. The bodies were badly burned, some of them beyond recognition. The work of recovering the bodies of the victims of the explosion is now being pushed, the only obstacle being the great damage done to the mines by the explosion. Chief State Mine Inspector James Hillhouse, who is on the scene, says that never before did he see so much damage wrought by an explosion as in this case, and that the force can hardly be estimated. The air courses are again normal in the mines and the rescuing parties are working with all possible haste and care.

The state mine inspector refuses as yet to give the cause or kind of explosion. The property damage will be no less than $25,000 to $40,000. The full death list will go up to 43 or 45.

Chicago.—Extinction of the [illegible] squirrel as well as of the rat [illegible] necessary if Chicago is to [illegible] bubonic plague, according to Dr. [illegible] Evans, head of the city health [illegible] ment.

Dr. Evans has received the [illegible] bulletin of the federal [illegible] which contains an alarming [illegible] the spread of bubonic plague by [illegible] that infest these animals. He [illegible] newed his advice for the [illegible] every rat in the city.

Up to August 13, 1909, [illegible] inspectors found 178 squirrels [illegible] Contra county, California, [illegible] with the plague. Orders were [illegible] afterward to poison every [illegible] that county. The government [illegible] mend out free poison for this [illegible]

Two cases that caused Dr. Evans [illegible] renew his warning for the extermination of rats in Chicago and that may [illegible] the squirrel in the same category [illegible] as follows:

"July 15, 1908, a boy who lived on a ranch in the northern part of Contra Costa county, died of the plague. Later in the same month a [illegible] woman of Pinole canyon succumbed.

"Infected rats were found on the ranch adjoining that on which the boy lived, according to the government report, and an infected squirrel was found near the house where the boy lived. The boy had been shooting squirrels several days before he took sick and threw his arm down into a squirrel burrow to get one of the animals he had shot. His arm was bitten by fleas, according to the government physicians, and the disease was communicated in that way.

"There is always a constant menace of the bubonic plague anywhere in the United States," said Dr. Evans, "and that it has got a hold in California. If it should ever be introduced into Chicago the conditions would be alarming, owing to the prevalence of rats and the difficulties of exterminating them.

"The building regulations of many places in California call for rat-proof cellars, but here it is too late to take such precautions. We would have to preside for rat proof basements and keep the rats away by poisoned food in the alleys and cellars.

"The government official realizes the danger of the spread of the bubonic plague and are taking every measure to prevent it. Prevention is better than cure, and Chicago must assist in the work.

"If the squirrel is in the same class as the rat he must also be exterminated."

Following Dr. Evans' first warning to exterminate rats, many large business houses in Chicago called in rat catchers. It is estimated that [illegible] the crusade against rodents was started a year ago nearly 200,000 rats have been killed in the city.

BABY LIVES ON HEN'S E[illegible]

Peculiar Diet of Washington Infant Cure for Indigestion—Treatment Costly.

Dayton, Wash.—Seven eggs [illegible] nothing else—is the peculiar diet of the ten-months-old infant of Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Warwick, ranchers living four miles southwest of Dayton.

When the child was seven months old physicians pronounced it incurable. It was suffering from indigestion and at one time weighed only 7 pounds less than at birth. While looking through an old "family physic" book one day Mr. Warwick read that eggs were good for indigestion in infants. Immediately the parents commenced feeding the baby fresh eggs.

From that time the infant was given seven eggs each day, and now promises to develop a robust constitution. The child wants practically no other kind of food, but it is growing fat and healthy on this diet. Mr. Warwick said that the child is cured of its indigestion, although with eggs at 40 cents it will cost $95.45 a year for the child's nourishment.

The story in connection with this coin is as follows: An employe in the New Orleans mint, whose duty it was to run the silver coin through the dies to have the head stamped upon it substituted a current silver dollar for the coin immediately after the head had been stamped upon it, and the other side unstamped and perfectly slick. This was in 1906. Three years later he ran the coin through the stamper for the reverse side, impressing another head and figure upon it. The fact that a coin had been put in at the first instance, to replace the half-coined dollar, prevented detection. In this manner, it is explained, the silver dollar came to have its two heads.

FROCK OF SILK VOILE.

This pretty frock, designed in Paris for a fashionable wedding, is of silk voile.

The skirt forms a slight puff at the bottom and is finished with a shaped flounce which is much deeper on one side than on the other, and is headed by a band of lace or embroidery, ornamented with a cockade of ribbon.

The waist forms a sort of bolero, trimmed with lace and embroidery, and with the ribbon knots.

The wide corselet girdle is of silk.

DO AWAY WITH TIRED LINES

Much Can Be Accomplished with Hot and Cold Water Treatment of the Face.

One of the most refreshing tonics for the face is supplied by the hot-and-cold-water treatment, much recommended by French women, who are so well up in toilet matters.

Turn on the hot tap and dab the water, as hot as can be borne, all over the face with the hands; then do the same with quite cold. Use hot and cold water alternately for ten minutes, and you will be surprised at the rejuvenating effect. All the tired lines seem to be smoothed out, and the face looks younger and fresher.

After drying the face, massage it with any good skin food. Wipe the face clean afterward with a soft handkerchief, and then with a piece of chamois dipped in powder.

The hands, arms and neck should be massaged and powdered in the same way.

The Untrimmed Hat.

The prevailing fashion for having an entirely plain hat on the head is interesting and artistic, but one should not adopt the fashion without knowing its dangers. They are these: That unless the hat has exquisite lines, which means perfection of cut and shape, it looks ungainly.

One must pay as much for the shape of the brim in a hat of this kind as for trimming. Too few women realise this.

A Boston Brahmin's Theory.

A century ago William Tudor, Jr., a distinguished Bostonian, wrote a "Memoir on the Consumption of Toast in the United States and Its Effects on the National Character." Not to enter too minutely into his Linnaean classification of toasts, with its genera of dry, buttered and immersed, one may refer to his theory of the influence of toasted bread and crackers. The careless housemaid, he said, usually carbonizes the bread, from which he inferred that the original toast existed in that form. The saying that "fried bread will make the hair curl" led on his part to a great ethnological discovery—nothing less than the fact that burnt toast had been the ancient food of Africa.

WHITE BEST GIRLS' COLOR

No Other Shade So Peculiarly Effective for the Costuming of the Small Maiden.

White is naturally the first choice for the youngsters who have not yet reached the dignity of school days, although this past season many fastidious mothers have dressed their little girls in colored frocks, and even the dark grown-up shades, as they might be termed, are seen even more than white.

There is actually the tailored influence in the morning frocks of pique, heavy linen and such allied fabrics, which are very simply fashioned.

Occasionally a little hand embroidery is seen, but as a rule they are delightfully simple, according to the Washington Times. Here again the Russian blouse type is paramount, and, in fact, it is a fashion which has never lost cast as far as kiddies' clothes are concerned. To wear over these dainty dresses are trig little coats of serge, diagonal and fancy mixtures, light-weight broadcloths and for the really warm days linen and pongee. The coats fastening on the side with the loose belt are very fetching, and are probably in first favor, although some excellent models boast of the long revers fastening on the side just as some of mother's coats do. The detachable collars and cuffs of pique for the morning, and daintily embroidered linen or lace for the afternoon, also add a summery touch.

There are so many quaint designs in ginghams that some of the beach dresses are sure to be fashioned from them. These may be worn with the lingerie guimpe, and are always very neat and winsome in appearance. On similar lines are developed the little gowns in linen, chambray and lawns.

Fascinating little creations in organdy have blossomed forth lovelier than ever in the new designs. These are very much beruffled confections, with their fetching little trimmings of lace, and when the girlie is dressed ready for the party, with her sash tied in a big, big bow, she looks for all the world as if she had stepped out of an old-fashioned picture book. Handwork is, as usual, the salient feature of the gowns.

A Clergyman in Racing.

It is seldom that a clergyman has official connection with horse racing, but Dr. Noyes, who has just written an account of his chaplaincy in Paris, was for many years the only Englishman on the board under the Societe des Steeplechases de France for adjudicating upon any question that might arise connected with the riders, many of whom are English. Until the date of his departure from Paris he regularly received tickets for the reserved inclosure.

Material for Flying Machines.

A novel material for flying machines and airships is a kind of reinforced paper, and is claimed by the German inventors, Dr. Wagner and Herr von Radinger, to be exceptionally light and strong. It is made of paper, raw silk and other fabric bound up with steel wire. The product is stated to be inexpensive, proof against fire and damp, and is expected to prove serviceable for a variety of purposes. A test of it is being made in an airship now being built at Stettin.

The Call of The Blood

for purification, finds voice in pimples, boils, sallow complexion, a jaundiced look, moth patches, and blotches on the skin,—all signs of liver trouble. But Dr. King's New Life Pills make rich red blood; give clear skin, rosy cheeks, fine complexion, health. Try them. 25c at Upchurch Drug Co.

Housework Gowns.

In planning one's morning dresses dresses which are really to be worn when doing the housework, there are two big, important things to remember; first, select dresses which are easy to get into; second, have them smart and becoming in line. Of course, there are other little details well worth remembering, such as avoiding much trimming, having the material well adapted to the purpose of the dress and having the general style neat and trim.—Woman's Home Companion.

One Conductor Who Was Cured.

Mr. Wilford Adams is his name, and he writes about it.—"Some time ago I was confined to my bed with chronic rheumatism. I used two bottles of Foley's Kidney Remedy with good effect, and the third bottle put me on my feet and I resumed work as conductor on the Lexington, Ky., Street Railway. It gave me more relief than any medicine I had ever used, and it will do all you claim in cases of rheumatism." Foley's Kidney Remedy cures rheumatism by eliminating the uric acid from the blood. FATHER 80-MOTHER 76

The aged father and mother of a prominent Boston lawyer safely carried through the last two winters by

Vinol

The son says: "My father and mother owe their present strength and good health to Vinol. During the last two trying winters neither of them had a cold, and were able to walk farther and do more than for years. I think Vinol is perfectly wonderful. It certainly is the greatest blood-making, strengthening tonic for old people I ever heard of."

We want every feeble old person in this town to try Vinol. We will return their money without question if it does not accomplish all we claim for it.

50 Per Cent Better

"I have used less than one bottle of Cardui," writes Mrs. Gertrude Ward, of Rushville, Neb., "and am feeling fifty per cent better than when I began taking it.

"Before taking Cardui, I had suffered with female trouble, for eight years. My greatest trouble was irregularity. I also suffered with severe pains, every month, but now I am greatly improved and will recommend Cardui to all my suffering friends."

Take CARDUI

J 48

The Woman's Tonic

The rare medicinal herbs of Cardui are imported by the manufacturers direct from Europe and are not to be found in any other medicine.

These ingredients are what give Cardui its superiority, as a female medicine and tonic, over any other medicine.

For over 50 years Cardui has been the favorite woman's medicine. The ladies like it, because it is so easy to take, so gentle, so safe, so reliable in its results, and they have faith in its curative tonic powers, because of the thousands of other ladies it has helped. Try it today.

FOR COUNTY COMMISSIONER.

E. J. HAYES.

The news is in the air that the Republicans are trying to trade with the Democrats. Now, boys, watch your guns and see that every one goes to the polls Monday and vote for their choice. We have got them on the run and they are badly scared. Sit steady in the boat and we will land old Chilton safely in the Democratic harbor in November next.

A frightful explosion at the Mulga mines in Jefferson county last Wednesday ended the lives of forty-one men. Such horrors appear to be unavoidable in coal mines. How much better off is the farmer, who lives and dies in the light of day.

E. J. HAYES

At the last hour the announcement of this gentleman for the position of County Commissioner appears; although last it is by no means the least. It would have appeared in our last issue but for the negligence of the person to whom it was intrusted. Mr. Hayes is a sturdy, life long Democrat, the very man we need in the Commissioners Court, and we bespeak for him a full and strong vote.

SENATOR BANKHEAD'S FINAL WORD.

To the Democratic Voters of Chilton County.

On account of pending legislation, in which Alabama is vastly interested, I have been detained in Washington and therefore have been unable to visit your county during the present campaign. I felt that my first duty was to care for the business committed to me as one of your Senators and that I could rely upon the fair and just people of the State to look after my interest while absent. During the present session of Congress results have been secured which will bring great and lasting good to the state. A most liberal and comprehensive River and Harbor bill has been passed insuring the completion of the War rior system. A twenty-seven foot channel at Mobile is provided for. The Coosa River is taken up for improvement with a view to navigation and power development. The Alabama is cared for. The Tennessee is generously provided for. The total appropriation including cash and continuing appropriations is nearly Four Million Dollars. The Agriculture committee unanimously reported my bill to appropriate half a million dollars to be expended in cooperation with the States and Counties in experimental road construction. I feel confident that the bill will be passed when reached on the calander at the present session. When road building, with Government aid begins, it will grow and extend as rapidly as rural delivery has done. Ten years ago I formulated a policy looking to the development of the unequaled resources of our State, and while progress has been slow, I have never faltered in my hope for ultimate success. The improvement of our waterways would lessen transportation charges and greatly facilitate commerce. The development of our water power one of our greatest wealth producers, the improvement of the roads, over which ninety per cent of the internal commerce of the State must be moved, are essential to the progress and future greatness of our beloved State. Our Agricultural interest is our richest asset, and will receive the largest degree of benefit from the successful prosecution and completion of the developments mentioned.

My greatest ambition is to be an humble instrument in the successful prosecution and completion of this great work. I have devoted and dedicated my life to the public service, and am willing to be judged by the results. While the performance of public duties has denied me the pleasure of seeing you personally, I am gratified to know that I have not been forgotton and trust that I will not suffer by my enforced absence at the post of duty. Only a few days intervene between now and the primary election and I confidently await the result, believing that my friends will remain active and vigilent until the polls close on the 2nd day of May.

Sincerely yours,
J. H. BANKHEAD.

All Druggists

Of all things considered, Mobile's solid citizen a man who received the endorsement of the commercial and industrial people of the Gulf City, is no better equipped to fill the position of Associate Railroad Commissioner which he seeks, than John Craft. Mr. Craft is an industrious, highminded and well balanced man with a wonderful fund of practical experience which will enable him to pursue the calling of Railroad Commissioner with credit an affectiveness to himself and a benefit to the State. He holds many positions of honor and trust thrusted upon him by the people of the State for which he has received no recompense beyond the good will of his fellow citizens. It is said that Mr. Craft will lead the ticket for the position which he seeks, and we ask our people to support and vote for him.

Office Exchange of Prisoners
Vicksburg, Miss., May 6, 1865

Private Lee Hayes, Company D, 62nd Alabama Regiment, a paroled prisoner of war, is hereby furlonghed until exchanged, with permission to remain at his home, performing no military duty whatever, and paying proper respect to the authorities in his locality.

By order of Colonel N. G. Watts,
Agent of Exchange, C. S. A.
H. A. M. Henderson, Lieut. Col.
Asst. Agent of Exchange, C S A.

Editor Banner:—Will you allow us a small space in your paper in regard to our candidates for the office of sheriff in the coming Democrat primary. Now we have nothing against any of the men who are asking for our votes. Of course, all of us want a good man and we the voters of Beat 15 believe that Lee Hayes is the man who we believe has made as good if not the best sheriff Chilton has ever had and we are going to do all we can to nominate him.

Maplesville, April 1, 1910

Editor Banner:—I am of the opinion that Mr. Lee Hayes is the best candidate so far announced for Sheriff on the Democratic ticket and a mistake would be made not to nominate him in the coming primary.

R. H. MARTIN.

Shoults, April 25, 1910

Editor Banner:—We know of no more suitable man for the office of Sheriff than Lee Hayes, and we are going to do our best to nominate him and we believe if he is nominated he will be elected as he has made a grand success when he was Sheriff.

Signed, J. O. Mize, C. W. Walker, H. C. Latham, N. W. Latham, G. T. Latham, Dolly Adkinson.

Pletcher, April 21, 1910

Editor Banner:—As the Democratic primary is near at hand we, the undersigned, will support Lee Hayes for Sheriff, as he made a good one when in that office.

Maccedonia, April 22, 1910

Editor Banner:—We ask for a small space in your paper to say a few words about ou. Sheriff. Now, we have nothing against any of the men who are asking for that office, but we recommend Lee Hayes, as he made a good record as every one knows when he was in that office.

Largest Shipment of Steel.

What is believed to be the largest single shipment of steel ever made was a 1,500-ton order which was recently filled by the Bethlehem Steel Works. Within 24 hours after the receipt of the order this great mass of structural shapes was loaded on 40 specially built pressed steel cars, making a train one-third of a mile long, hauled by two huge locomotives.

Veteran Skaters Still Lively.

Philadelphia boasts of having two of the oldest living skaters. On the first day that the ice was in condition the old-timers, William H. Wetherill and his brother Frank, 72 and 71 years old, respectively, made their annual appearance on Haverford college pond. They cut the figure eight and did other stunts that widened the eyes of onlooking youngsters.

Curious.

"Daughter, where did you ever get the idea that a photographer's camera is hard on a person's clothes?"

"I never had such an idea, papa. The idea!"

"Then how is it that you always wear as few clothes as the law allows when you have your picture taken?"

ROBERT C. BRICKELL

Hon. Robert C. Brickell, of Huntsville, who is a candidate for the office of attorney general, is one of the younger members of the bar who have attained distinction in the practice of law. Possessing energy, ability, application and character, he is recognized at the age of thirty-two as one of the leaders of the North Alabama Bar. Mr. Brickell bears the same unblemished reputation and has in his make-up the same talent that characterized his distinguished father, who during a service of a quarter of a century as judge and as chief justice of the supreme court, did much toward giving that court the high rank it has maintained.

His candidacy is endorsed by a large majority of the lawyers of the state, whose judgment in the selection of any attorney general should have much weight with the people. Mr. Brickell is conducting a very aggressive campaign and one in keeping with the dignity of the office which he is seeking. We commend him to the voters of the state as a Democrat, an able lawyer and as a man of high character.—Mobile Register. Editoral.

Mr. Brickell stands on his own record as a Democrat and on his capability as a lawyer. His ability is recognized by the legal profession of Alabama, his candidacy being favored by eighty per cent of the lawyers of the state. He is publicly endorsed by the bare of twenty-one counties, including Jefferson, Montgomery and Mobile. Lawyers are in position to know the qualifications and characters of the different candidates and their opinions are deserving of much weight by the people.

Mr. D. H. Riddle, candidate for Attorney General, is publishing a statement purporting to be the correct Supreme Court records during the past ten years of the candidates for that office. Mr. Riddle claims 86 cases to his credit. A thorough examination of the Supreme Court report reveals only 53 cases in which Mr. Riddle's name appears. This decrepancy of 33 cases having been called to Mr. Riddle's attention, together with the names of the 53 cases above mentioned, he offered a list containing the names of some other cases in which he claimed to have appeared. Upon investigation some of the latter cases cannot be found in the reports, while in some others Mr. Riddle's name does not appear as of counsel.

While the issue is rather an unimportant one, it is misleading the people should know the class of litigation in which each candidate has appeared. Mr. Brickell has to his credit many cases of importance. Of the 53 cases in which Mr. Riddle is shown to have appeared, 44 have been decided to date. Five of these were criminal cases and four were civil cases in which Mr. Riddle was one of the parties to the suite. Of the remaining 35 cases, fourteen or forty per cent, originated in the justice of the peace courts. In twenty-one, or sixty per cent, a summing up of all the property sued on and which caused the litigation, is as follows:

Five crops of cotton, corn, etc.,
One Keg;
One Mule;
Two Rifles;
One Calf;
One Clay-bank colored horse. (Appearing in six cases and extending over a period of four years in the Supreme Court)
One Black and white spotted steer. (In two cases)
Five Cows.
Eight Pigs.

Does the above record, which Mr. Riddle has laid down as the only test of his competency for the office of Attorney General, show him fitted for that office?

Antioch.

Editor Banner:—Health is very good at the present time, except Mr. L. L. Seale' baby is on the sick list but is imdroving some now and hope it will be up soon.

The snow this morning is fine, but not on corn and cotton. The most of the people have done planting corn, and some are just about done planting cotton. But I think that the most of us will have to plant over after the snow is over; all we can hear now is cold weather and poltic.

I saw a piece from Maplesville said "Let us have Jones for Sheriff, and Mallory for Governor and Deason for Judge." I think Jones and Deason is alright but, oh! you Mallory, the amendment man.

Emmett O'Neal is the man for Governor. I hope "A Friend" will get his mind off of Mallory; he may be a good man but I don't think we need him for our Governor. He would be another B. B. Comer I think. Vote for O'Neal if you want a good Governor and Jones for Sheriff and Deason for Judge.

THE KID.

Impossible to be Well

It is impossible to be well, simply impossible, if the bowels are constipated. You must pay attention to the laws of nature, or suffer the consequences. Undigested material, waste products, poisonous substances, must be removed from the body at least once each day, or there will be trouble. A sluggish liver is responsible for an immense amount of suffering and serious disease. Ask your doctor about Ayer's Pills. He knows why they act directly on the liver. Trust him. J. C. The Impertinent Stranger

By Olive Roberts Barton

Avery Southern had just had another streak of luck. That day he had sold cotton just in time and cleared $20,000.

Wealth was not an old story to him as it was to the majority of the hardened money mongers of the street. It was still enough of a novelty for him to wonder what he would do with it all. But then he had no wife to help him spend it.

He stopped at Angelo's fruit stand on his way home. He had no motor car. There was plenty of time to get one when he wanted it.

He rustled some crisp bills in his pockets as Angelo picked over the oranges to get him the finest. While he stood there a girl stepped up beside him and waited for the little Italian to finish with his customer.

Avery seldom noticed girls, but the beauty of this one caught his eye. She was young and her shabby clothes did not conceal her grace.

It had started to snow and she shivered as she stood there, glancing impatiently at the clock on the wall of the little shop as if jealous of every second. Then Avery saw, too, that her shoes were low and thin, that her black suit was of summer weight and the black hat of straw. "Winter came too soon for her, poor child," he thought.

Then his eyes wandered back to the beautiful face. She was pale, a trifle too white, perhaps, but her head was high and her eyes as they met his were those of a queen. Then, as he continued to gaze, she blushed and turned away. Avery himself looked anything but polished after a strenuous day, and he needed a shave.

He got his oranges, took the change for a dollar bill—to the astonishment and chagrin of Angelo, who expected as usual to be told to keep it—tired in vain for another glimpse of the charming face, and left. He, too, glanced at the clock and knew he would remember the time. Then he heard her ask for oranges.

"Mebba da Orange Grow That-a-Way."

A week later, Mildred Everly hurried home through a blizzard. The tears froze on her cheeks and blinded her. She struggled on through the storm, clutching the bag, with its two oranges, tightly in her stiffened fingers.

She was very miserable. Judson, the foreman, had been almost impossible to please that day and she had made less money than usual. Since her mother had been ill she had become discouraged and homesick for the little village they still called home. "Oh, if only we had money to go back! I know mother would get well," she sobbed into the storm, "and besides that man would not—Oh, how can he be so beastly?"

She turned friously red when she thought of the stranger at the fruit stand. For the third time that week she had seen him there, and he seemed to be getting more familiar. This evening he had smiled so oddly at her. She stamped in the snow as she thought of it. Her foot slid into a drift and the snow slipping along over the top of the low shoe soaked her stocking. She hurried on soberly.

"These oranges are not so nice as usual, dear," said Mildred's mother with the quavering voice of an invalid. "They seem soft."

"Never mind, dear," answered the girl, "I am not going to Angelo's any more. I will get you better ones next time. Here, let me peel it for you. She inserted her finger into a small slit in the side and pulled off a chunk of the thick skin. Something folded and green fell to the table. It was a $100 bill.

Without a word she reached for the other orange. It was the same. A small slit in the skin concealed a new $100 bill beneath. Mother and daughter gasped.

"Oh, mother, am I dreaming? It is all some dreadful mistake. I must take them back."

But Angelo knew nothing. His great, mysterious black eyes had kept secrets before and he fingered a crisp new bill in his own pocket, the price of his silence. Mildred could get nothing from him. "You keep it, miss. You find it. Mebbe da orange grow that-a-way." And he showed his white teeth.

But she did buy more fruit at Angelo's. She went, time after time, trying to solve the mystery of the money. She never saw the stranger again and never noticed a figure following her within safe distance every evening—a person who smiled with approval when he saw the thin shoes and suit of black replaced by substantial boots, cloak and furs. And the straw hat had given place to a little fur toque. What a stunning girl she was!

Two weeks later, Mildred found $500 in the same way that she had found the others, and a paper, "Please use this. Go back 'home.'"

The world was bearing a great deal of Avery Southern the next summer. While he was getting rich in the city Mildred and her mother were getting back strength and happiness in the country.

One morning, as Mildred in a pretty pink gingham dress, closed the little garden gate of her mother's cottage, a stranger crossed the road. He looked familiar to Mildred, but she was already late at the millinery store she had opened in the village, and she hurried away. All day over her work she tried to remember where she had seen him, but finally gave up.

The stranger, meantime, had entered the garden she had left and lifted his hat to Mrs. Everly on the porch.

When Mildred came home for luncheon she found the stranger established as a boarder in her mother's house. "It is only for two weeks, dearie," apologized Mrs. Everly. "Poor young man! He looks as though he needed a vacation, and you know how glad we were to get out of the city. Besides, it will be a little extra for us, dearie."

"All right, Momsy," Mildred made the best of it and tried to stop racking her brains for the time and place she had seen him before.

The first two or three days Mr. Smith—Avery Smith he called himself—was out a great deal, appearing only at meal time. "He certainly does not force his society upon us," commented Mildred on the fourth day, a little piqued at his indifference. On the fifth day when he asked to walk with her to town she gladly acquiesced. On the seventh day he walked both ways. On the tenth, it was four times, including lunch time.

After that he made the four trips as a regular thing and the two strolled over the fields in the long summer evenings. They watched the baby moon grow big, and the time lengthened into nearly three weeks. Avery Smith telegraphed for leave of absence and got it, he said. But the day came when he must leave.

Mildred had spoiled two hats that day and at last had given up. He was to call for her early and take her home. Then he would leave on the evening train. She had put on her best white dress and her eyes wore a wonderful expression as she watched for the familiar figure swinging down the street. She looked very beautiful.

Four, five o'clock came without him. At half past five she locked the door and walked slowly home. He must have been delayed in the village and would overtake her. But she reached the little gate without a sign of him.

"Mr. Smith had to leave early, dear," said Mrs. Everly. "He got a telegram. He said to tell you he was sorry and to say good-by. You are dreadfully pale. Are you tired?"

"A little, Momsy, but I—I think it is the heat."

"And Mildred, I have the things all on the table for your supper. You don't mind eating alone, do you? Its missionary supper night at Mrs. Tippen's. Mr. Smith paid his board. It's in the darning bag, in case of fire, dear. Now do rest, you look so tired." And Mrs. Everly hurried away.

Mildred flung herself into the hammock and lay there motionless without a thought of supper. The tea got cold and the salad warm and still she lay. The shadows grew longer and the sunbeams through the great oaks were very yellow. Then the ghost of a breeze sprang up, the yellow beams faded and the fluffy clouds took on the pink of sunset. Mildred, gazing through the branches, suddenly saw the great red disk of the moon—their moon!

With a cry she struggled blindly to her feet. "Avery—oh, Avery," she sobbed and held out her arms to the empty air.

Then something wonderful happened. Two strong arms closed around her and someone drew her head to his breast. "My darling! My little girl! You love me. Say it, for I love you better than my life! Your mother helped me to find out if you would miss me. And you do, dear—you love me?"

"Yes—I love you, I love you, sweetheart," she whispered as their lips met.

And not until they were married did she know her husband was the great Southern, the millionaire.

New Lease of Life for Old House.

The oldest house on Cape Cod, built about 1600, is being moved from its present location in West Brewster into the adjoining town of Dennis, where it will shortly be changed into a magnificent summer residence by J. D. Andersen of Hartford, Conn.

The ancient landmark of more than two centuries was built for one of the first settlers in Brewster, John Dillingham, by Isaac Winslow, and has always been known as the old Dillingham house. On one of the large rafters in the attic there is cut the date, "1690," showing the date on which it was erected.

Very True.

English Official.—Now the suffragettes have taken to throwing acid. What do you think of that?

Second Ditto.—I call that a burning shame.

Mulberry.

Editor Banner:—Will you let me have a small space in your columns as I am a little uneasy, for I fear that voters for the amendment will be disfranchised, for some have intimated that we should not be eligible to office any more. Now, I do say that any one that is of such a disposition as to make such a remark or hint will never hold an office of any kind by my vote, and I think a man that has brains enough to hold an office would not dig up an issue that is of the past, for we have done all we could and then submitted to the majority. Now we have quit chewing the rag about it, but trust it will come in the future when the curse of whiskey will be a thing of the past. Then there is another way of talking by some men who seek office, that is a poor way, that is trying to beat his opponent by telling all sorts of mean things abou thim. That is wrong and don't win any votes. I had a rival when I first married, and I spoke well of him to the girl and she finally took me instead of him, for I thought if I lowered him I would cast a slur on the girl, so I got the girl alright. If we can't say any good thing, say nothing bad. Now, if we will all all do as we should let's all vote for a good true Democrat for Sheriff. That can be found in B. L. Jones, he was born a Democrat, and is a nice, sympathetic gentleman. He is thoroughly competent to fill the office to the satisfaction of the entire county. I will gladly vouch for him.

A Constipation Remedy Free

There is no action of your daily life of greater importance than to see that your bowels move. They should move at least once a day naturally, and by that is meant without any help. If they do not move at least once a day you can consider yourself constipated and it is time you did something about it.

You will be glad to know there is a way out of the difficulty. Lemuel Landerdale, an old soldier at Quincy, Ill., Elmer McMillan, of Speed, Mo., Mrs. Monahan, of Stonewall, Miss., and many others were as you are now. But one day they awoke to the fact that Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin was curing their friends, so they bought it too and it cured them. Today they are loud in praise of it.

What Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin did for them it should do for you. Surely your constipation is no worse than theirs, one of whom had it since '61. It only remains for you to realise that salts are of but temporary good, and what you want is a permanent cure; that purgative tablets, cathartic pills and such violent things make a great show of doing something, but do nothing that is lasting. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a scientific preparation, a laxative-tonic, a mild syrupy liquid that contains ingredients that not only cure the constipation, but tone the intestinal muscles so that they learn again to work without help. A bottle can be bought of any druggist for the small price of 50 cents, and there is a dollar size for families who have already found out its wonderful value in stomach, liver and bowel troubles, in old or young.

Send your name and address to the doctor and a free trial bottle will be sent you so that you can test it before buying.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

HOW HEARING IS AFFECTED

Two Theories as to the Effect of Artillery Practice on Auditory Apparatus.

A writer in a recent number of La Nature, M. Ghastang, gives some interesting facts with regard to artillery practice in the French navy, and shows an inclination to favor the supposition, which we do not remember to have seen mentioned before, that in many instances injury to the auditory apparatus from the discharge of cannon is really due rather to aspiration than to concussion, says a writer in the New York Medical Journal.

It seems that on the schoolship as many as from 700 to 1,000 charges are fired at a seance, presumably in rather quick succession. Thus an immense amount of gas generated by the combustion of the powder is produced, and this (in some way that does not appear clear to us) leads to such rarefaction of the air of the deck that it is suction instead of impact that injures the ear. The author finds support for this supposition in the fact that plugs of cotton inserted into the auditory canal are often found to have been wholly or in part withdrawn by the firing.

He admits, however, that persons standing very close to the gun are injured by concussion, as has commonly been supposed.

Which result from a disordered condition of the womb and its appendages can usually be cured by the timely use of that great Southern Remedy, VIN-O-VIÆ, made by the Granger Medicine Co., of Chattanooga, Tenn. If you "are all run down" and have pains and irregularities, VIN-O-VIÆ will give you good service. Every woman should have it on hand. You may need it any time. Druggists sell it at $1.00 per bottle. Best Training.

Society has this good at least; that it lessens our conceit, by teaching us our insignificance, and making us acquainted with our betters. If you are a young person who read this, depend upon it, sir or madam, there is nothing more wholesome for you than to acknowledge and associate with your superiors. If I could, I would not have my son Thomas first Greek and Latin prize boy, first oar, and cock of the school. Better for his soul's and body's welfare that he should have a good place, not the first—a fair set of competitors round about him, and a good thrashing now and then, with a hearty shake afterwards of the hand which administered the beating.—W. M. Thackeray.

Megaphone Assists Bugle.

The megaphone has been used at some western army posts for the purpose of amplifying the volume of the bugle, where it is desired that the calls shall be heard at a distance greater than the sound will carry under ordinary circumstances. The notes of the horn may be distinguished easily at almost incredible reaches in this manner.

Saved From The Grave.

"I had about given up hope, after nearly four years of suffering from a severe lung trouble," writes Mrs. M. L. Dix, of Clarksville, Tenn. "Often the pain in my chest would be almost unbearable and I could not do any work, but Dr King's New Discovery has made me feel like a new person. Its the best medicine made for the throat and lungs." Obstinate coughs, stubborn colds, hay fever, la grippe, asthma, croup, bronchitis and hemorrhages, hoarseness and whooping cough, yield quickly to this wonderful medicine. Try it, 50c and $1.00. Two Sabbath Incidents

Studies based on Lessons for May 1, 1910

Specially arranged for This Paper

LESSON V (v. 1-5).—Matthew (Bible Manual, p. 4).

GOLDEN TEXT.—"I will have mercy and not sacrifice."—Matt. 12:7.

TIME.—In the summer of A. D. 28. Matthew's gospel would indicate.

PLACE.—Grain field and synagogue. Galilee, probably in Capernaum.

Suggestive and Practical Thoughts.

A Work of Necessity.—Vs. 1-5. Th[e] Cause of criticism (v. 1). What [a] of the disciples seemed to defy [the] law of the Sabbath? "Can you [i]magine a more quiet Sabbath afternoon [than] walk through the ripening corn fields? The sun is declining in the west[ern] sky, there is not a cloud in the [sky], between the breath of wind stirs [the] wheat. It is now white with harvest. To-morrow many reapers will be [out] with the sickle, to begin the great work of the year, the cutting and [car]rying in the grain. Then the [hus]bandmen are the light cars the merry [ox]en, the blue-bottle and [the] purple anemone will be mown down together. . . . As Jesus and the two walk through the corn fields they [are] hungry, and they pluck the ripe [ears], rub them in their hands, blow away the light husk, and eat the [few] brown-yellow grains that remain in their palms."—Rev. S. Baring Gould.

The Charge (v. 2). What was it the disciples did that the Pharisees, spying upon them, objected to? Not taking the grain or eating it, but the manner in which it was done. Reaping and threshing were properly forbidden on the Sabbath, and the Pharisees insisted that plucking grain with the hand was a kind of reaping, and rubbing the husk off was a kind of threshing.

The Fourfold Reply (vs. 3-8). Our Lord's answer to the Pharisees' charge is especially interesting because of its variety.

First Reply, the Example of David (vs. 3, 4), who, when fleeing from Saul, persuaded Ahimelech the priest to feed him and his hungry followers with the twelve symbolic loaves of bread kept on the golden table in the Holy Place of the tabernacle to signify that God was the provider of the people's food.

Moreover, this was done on the battle day when the loaves were changed (see Inductive Study 2); not only that, but the priests were allowed to eat that sacred food. Thus David "met them first on their own ground, because life is more than law, according to rabbis."—Ian Maclaren. It was an illustration of the far greater importance of human need than any ceremonial requirement or ware form, however sacred. [T]here may be just a hint in [t]his. Have ye not read? that [co]uld not produce Scripture for the [pr]osecution, as he would do for [Hi]m which he allowed. The illustration is perhaps chosen [wi]th reference to the parallel between himself, the true King, now unrecognized and hunted with his humble followers, and the fugitive outlaw David."—Alexander Maclaren.

Second Reply, the Example of Priests (vs. 5, 6), for whom the [Sa]bbath is the busiest day of the week. [Y]et no one blames them, but rather all men praise them, because they are doing God's holy temple service.

Third Reply, the Law's Real Requirement (v. 7), which is mercy and not sacrifice—a point upon which the prophets often insist.

Fourth Reply, Christ's Authority. [Ma]rk's account precedes [the] words with the notable utterance: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." That [Sa]bbath was not made to annoy [and] vex men, to afflict him, impoverish him, [and] starve him, free him from [wo]rk, bless him with the highest [rest] that God can bestow upon [him].

A Work of Mercy.—Vs. 9-11. A Blessed Opportunity (vs. 9, 10). What is the best test of conduct during [the] Sabbath keeping? See whether it [is] in Christ's example! How [many] of the recorded miracles were [wro]ught on the Sabbath; among [them] this case of the withered hand.

What sad case was Christ's [Sym]pathy? A man who had his [hand] withered,—his right hand, the useful one, as Luke the physician carefully noted.

Tradition says the man had come to Christ to heal him, and Luke tells us that the scribes and Pharisees were there watching Him, as they had dogged his steps through the cornfield,—watching Him furtively, Greek implies.

How was the cure performed? With a look of sorrow and indignation upon the kind-hearted Physician (Mark), and with only a calm command to the cripple, "Stretch forth thine hand." Perhaps only the hand was withered, but probably the arm also was paralyzed, and if the man had stopped to think and reason instead of promptly obeying, he would not have been healed. "And it was restored whole."

The Unmerciful Pharisees (vs. 11). What effect had the miracle on the Pharisees? They could bring no charge against Christ, for he had done no work; he had merely spoken a few quiet sentences. Nor could they succeed against the cured man, for he had only stretched out his hand. Yet their fanatical spirits were outraged by Christ's defiance of their absurd Sabbath restrictions than by anything else he ever did. They at once began to plot how they might destroy him. To such depths of sin man's selfish pride bring the heart!

Two Sabbath Incidents

Sunday Lesson Lessons for May 1, 1910
Specially arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 12:1-14. Memory verses, 7, 8.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"I will have mercy, and not sacrifice."—Matt. 12:7.

TIME.—The summer of A. D. 28. Mark and Luke place the event earlier than Matthew's grouping would indicate.

PLACE.—Grain field and synagogue in Galilee probably in Capernaum.

Suggestive and Practical Thought.

A Work of Necessity.—Vs. 1-8. The Cause of criticism (v. 1). What act of the disciples seemed to defy the law of the Sabbath? "Can you not imagine that quiet Sabbath afternoon walk through the ripening corn-fields! The sun is declining in the western sky, there is not a cloud in the blue heavens, the breath of wind stirs the wheat-fields now white with harvest. To-morrow busy reapers will be here with the sickle, to begin the great work of the year—the cutting and carrying of the grain. Then the heavy ears and the light ears, the scarlet poppy and the blue-bottle and the purple corn-cockle will be mown down together. As Jesus and the twelve walk through the corn-fields they are hungry and they pluck the ripe ears, rub the grain in their hands, blow away the light husk, and eat the hard brown-yellow grains that remain in their palms."—Rev. S. Baring-Gould.

The Charge (v. 2). What was it in the act that the Pharisees, spying upon Jesus, objected to? Not taking the grain or eating it, but the manual work involved. Reaping and threshing were properly forbidden on the Sabbath and the Pharisees insisted that plucking grain with the hands was a kind of reaping, and rubbing the husk off was a kind of threshing!

The Fourfold Reply (vs. 3-8). Our Lord's answer to the Pharisees' charge is especially interesting because of its variety.

First Reply, the Example of David (vs. 3, 4), who, when fleeing from Saul, persuaded Ahimelech the priest to feed him and his hungry followers with the twelve symbolic loaves of bread kept on the golden table in the Holy Place of the tabernacle to signify that God was the provider of the people's food.

Moreover, this was done on the Sabbath, the day when the loaves were changed (see Inductive Study 3), and not for but the priests was allowed to eat that sacred food. Thus Jesus justifies them first on their own ground; because life is more than law, even according to rabbis."—Ian Maclaren."

It was an illustration of the far greater importance of human need than any ceremonial requirement or outward form, however sacred. "Perhaps there may be just a hint in the days. Have ye not read? that they could not produce Scripture for their prohibition, as he would do for the liberty which he allowed. The first illustration is perhaps chosen with special reference to the parallel between himself, the true King, now unrecognized and hunted with his humble followers, and the fugitive outlaw with his band."—Alexander Maclaren, D.D.

Second Reply, the Example of the Priests (vs. 5, 6), for whom the Sabbath is the busiest day of the week. No one blames them, but rather all men praise them, because they are serving God's holy temple.

Third Reply, the Law's Real Requirement (v. 7), which is mercy and not sacrifice—a point upon which the prophets often insist.

Fourth Reply, Christ's Authority (v. 8). Mark's account precedes these words with the notable utterance, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." The Sabbath was not made to annoy man, to vex him, impoverish him, but to enrich him, free him from bondage to evil, bless him with the highest joys that God can bestow upon him.

A Work of Mercy.—Vs. 9-14. A The Unused Opportunity (vs. 9, 10). What is the best test of correct Sabbath keeping? See whether it conforms to Christ's example! Some of his recorded miracles were performed on the Sabbath; among these, this of the withered hand.

What sad case was Christ's sympathy? A man who had his hand withered.—his right hand, the most useful one, as Luke the physician carefully noted.

Tradition says the man begged Christ to heal him, and Luke tells us that the scribes and Pharisees were there watching him, as they had dogged his steps through the wheat-field,—watching him furtively, the Greek implies.

How was the cure performed? With a look of sorrow and indignation cast upon the hard-hearted Pharisees (Mark), and with only a calm command to the cripple, "Stretch forth thine hand." Perhaps only the hand was withered, but probably the arm also was paralyzed, and if the man had stopped to think and reason, instead of promptly obeying, he would not have been healed. "And it was restored whole."

The Unmerciful Pharisees (v. 14). What effect had the miracle on the Pharisees? They could bring no charge against Christ, for he had done no work, he had merely spoken a quiet sentence. Nor could they proceed against the cured man, for he had only stretched out his hand. And yet their fanatical spirits were more enraged by Christ's defiance of their absurd Sabbath restrictions than by anything else he ever did. They at once began to plot how they might destroy him. To such depths can a man's selfish pride bring the human heart!

Editor Banner:—As it has been sometime since I have written to the dear old Banner, with the permission of the Editor I will say a few words in regard to our little town of Sunnierfield. It is located nine miles north of Selma, very beautiful, quiet little place, a fine farming country, fine land, clay foundation, people raise mostly cotton here. There are not many white people here, about 30 family's and plenty negroes. So we have plenty of black labor here. We have five stores, postoffice, Methodist church and ginnery here and a fine road to market.

The State Methodist Orphanage is situated here, there are about two hundred children there now, a man and his wife by the name of Reid have charge there.

It is a pretty sight to see so many children all ages and size together.

Well, politics are the rage now here and in Chilton also. I will be glad when the election is over, for I am tired reading so much politics and some candidates will get left alone and some one will be heart broken over getting left, so I guess as I am a woman I haven't any right to talk politics, so I will say what has become of all our old writers? Don't let politics push you out. Come on, and make our dear old Banner more interesting than ever. Give us all the news. I love to hear from there, Sardis particularly, for it is my old home.

MRS. R. J. CAMPBELL.

The Sound Sleep of Good Health.

The restorative power of sound sleep cannot be over estimated and any ailment that prevents it is a menace to health. J. L. Southers, Eau Claire, Wis., says:—"For a long time I have been unable to sleep soundly nights, because of pains across my back and soreness of my kidneys. My appetite was very poor and my general condition was much run down. I have been taking Foley's Kidney Pills but a short time and now sleep as sound as a rock. I eat and enjoy my meals, and my general condition is greatly improved. I can honestly recommend Foley's Kidney Pills as I know they have cured me." Upchurch Drug Co.

A Natural Strength Giver

Ordinary tonics that merely supply food material and give artificial strength by stimulation are never lasting in their effect because they do not remove the cause of the ill health.

A "run down" condition is generally due to the failure of the digestive organs to properly digest the food.

LET THE PEOPLE RULE.

VOL. XVIII CLANTON, ALA., THURSDAY, MAY 5, 1910 No. 31

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

The primary passed off quietly on Monday in Chilton and E. B. Deason was duly nominated for Judge of Probate, H. M. Simpson for Circuit Clerk, Bowen Jones was successful candidate for Sheriff .Lee Hayes coming in second, Morgan third, Cox fourth. G. D. Retherford and E. J. Hayes received the nomination for Commissioners and now we can all rest awhile until the Republicans have made their choice of candidates.

We take the following from the Montgomery Advertiser of Wednesday:

The returns from the primary election of Monday were not fully complete at midnight Tuesday night, but it was definitely fixed that the majority of Emmett O'Neal for Governor over Hon. S. D. Mallory would be between 12,000 to 15,000.

Senator E. Perry Thomas is a certain winner for Lieutenant Governor, although State Treasurer W. D. Seed has put up a strong race, is still hopeful that he has won. Senator Thomas's majority will probably fall short of that cast for Mr. O'Neal.

Robert C. Brickell has a big plurality for Attorney-General over his two competitors, D. H Riddle and Thomas L. Bulger. At one time it was thought that the race would be extremely close, but as the returns came in Tuesday afternoon and Tuesday night from the big counties, Mr. Brickell forged forward as did Senator Thomas.

Leon McCord is an easy and certain winner for Railroad Commissioner. Frank N. Julian, it would appear, has won second place, although Senator Max Hamburger has a chance in the late returns. A great local fight was waged in Marshall county between Leon McCord and John A. Lusk, both of whom are from Marshal. Mr. McCord has a telegram saying:

"You have beat Lusk in Marshall by 381 votes."

Henry J. Willingham had a walkover in the race for Superintendent Education. His majority goes higher with every report.

Capt. R. F. Kolb may receive the highest majority given any candidate on the State ticket with opposition.

M. C. Algood made a good race against C. Brooks Smith for Auditor, but the votes from the big counties which have decided so many of the contests appear to have given Mr. Smith a safe lead.

Cyrus B. Brown is a winner over Charles H. Greer for Secretary of State. While Greer, who started late, ran powerfully towards the last, Mr. Brown will have a good majority.

For Treasurer, J. A. Wilkinson is the winner. Judge John Purifoy was not considered a dangerous factor by some of the political leaders during the campaign, but in the early report he loomed up strong and he ran well at the finish.

Judge John C. Anderson leads easily in the three cornered race for the two places on the Supreme bench. The other winner is Ormond Somerville. The defeat of Judge A. A. Evans is attributed largely to the fact that in some sections of the state, he was opposed because he had been named to the Supreme Court bench by Governor Comer. Mr. Somerville, however, had a fine body of volunteer workers at the various polls in the persons of a number of former students at the University Law School.

The plurality of Senator John H. Bankhead is exceptionally large in a race in which there were three candidates.

Editor Banner:—Please give me space to say a few words. You remember some time ago the Coon promised to appear again. I am first in receipt of a sample copy of the Union, and found one the greatest pieces in the first column I have ever seen on the pike.

Yes, he says he is the boss, but I fear the boss will get out of a job this fall. We have not forgotton November the 29th yet, nor will we soon. He tells us that it is the custom to give an officer the second term. If that is true his term is due twelve years from now, for Honeycutt and Adams will com ahead of him.

Democratic success is almost sure; I have never seen prospects brighter. The amendment brought the boss to sure defeat. He has not got one man over where I make my headquarters.

I notice Sly Fox says that Beat 2 will roll up a big vote for the boss. Don't want to take him. Beat 2 can go solid and then we will have a new judge in 1911.

Now, to the boys who favor new officers in Chilton, I say put your shoulders to the wheel and we will put the amendment men out of a job this fall.

PRAYER OF THE POLITICIAN BY THE BOSS.

Almighty master, the pie counter is again at stake. Thou knowest, kind master, that I have bossed this counter for the past several years, but at present the way looks dark to me.

Place the night line in my hand that I may be blessed with office one more time. That trfling amendment has almost ruined me. Blot out from the book of remembrance all that is against me; call it a dead issue, for I thought sure it would win out, and as soon as I found it was not going to carry I stopped my racket and went to bed until the storm was over. Many of my sheep have strayed; how can I get them back on my side? I want the nomination for judge; Jackson for sheriff; Bean for clerk; Collins for representative—us four and no more. Amen.

Editor Banner:—Please let me have a small space in the dear old Banner to say a few words.

Health of our little city is very good at present, except that Mrs. Fanny Pool is very ill, but we hope she will soon recover.

Brother Deason filled his regular appointment Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Wilkins, of Maplesville, were visitors here Sunday.

Well, boys, I think the wedding bells will soon be ringing.

Mr. and Mrs. Charley Littlejohn visited the family of Mr. John Anderson Sunday.

Mr. Jasper Atcheson gave us a pleasant call Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Oscar Alden visited home this week, from Burnsville.

Well, I will ring off for this time, and if this misses the waste basket I will come again ROUNDER.

The less a man has to do, the more he talks of being pressed for time.

Jacksonville Ala., April 30, 1910

Editor Banner:—Will you permit me to have a short space in your paper to say that one of our school boys from your county have been in school here for the past two years and as Prof. J. B. Donovan will not be with us any more, we want to say that two year ago this young man came to Jacksonville as a stranger but it was not long until he formed acquaintances with many of the boys and girls, until he had a host of friends, and we are sorry to know that Prof. Donovan cannot be with us in this school any longer. But as he will still be in our little city for a while it is not so hard to give him up. Prof. Donovan was one among our best boys in school, and he was always found trying to be of some help to others as well as himself, he is known by most all of the citizens of our town, and every one that knows him thinks well of him and speak well of him. He meets everybody with a pleasant word, but this is not all we are glad to say that he will begin work with one of our best citizens, Mr. Farmer, who is one of our R. R. agents, and we feel thankful that he will have a good home as long as he stays there. But there is another thought, we are glad to say that Prof. Donovan has a lovely wife. His wife was once one of our school students of this school, and we always found her to be a faithful worker in school and in church and this being true of both we feel sure that if we should have to give them up they would be missed by many that known them both. But we hope that Prof. Donovan will be successful in the study of telegraphy so that he may remain here as a citizen with his many friends. We feel sure that his lovely wife will do all that she can to help him in his undertakings, and will bare with him until he has accomplished his great work, as it is growing late, and I have other work to be done. I will close by saying there are many who wish Prof. Donovan and wife much success.

A FRIEND OF BOTH.

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space in your valuable paper to say a few words. The literary school closed at this place Friday, April, 22. It was indeed sad to part with our dear friends and school mates, with whom we have been bound together with the closeet ties of affection for so many months, but it was the saddest to part with our dear teacher whom we all love so well, and our heartfelt sympathy goes with her wherever she may be called to go. Her presence will not only be missed in the school room and in the home where she boarded, but in the Sunday school where she was always ready and willing to do all that was in her power. 'Tis all sad, but we hope to see her again soon. And we can only look to God who doeth all things well and say "God be with you till we meet." We also extend our many thanks to our dear friends who helped us in our work; may their life be long and prosperous.

The concert was attended by a large crowd who report a nice time.

Sunday school at this place is progressing nicely; we only regret not having our teacher, Miss Julia Parrish, with us any longer. Wishing the Banner and its many readers success, will ring off, we remain as ever, TWO SCHOOL GIRLS.

Chicken Goes a Traveling.

On Sunday morning a pullet belonging to Mr. J. S. Retherford took a notion to jump on a train and take a ride. Waving a farewell to the unfortunate owner the pullet on a coal car went merrily off and is supposed to have alighted at Coopers from which point it probably made a journey to some one's frying pan.

Editor Banner:—As I have not seen anything from this place in some time, will you give me space for a few lines.

When I came home from my work on the 26th, to my surprise the house was decorated with flowers. I was 17 that day, and soon my friends were gathering until the house was full, and they gave me many presents. Then mama arose and told them that I was pretty good to mind and would not go to base ball games on Sunday. Then she said now enjoy yourselves. So we played several games, and then chose a girl to pass the cakes. Miss P. Turner was chosen, and passed the snow white cakes.

Next was a nice box of candy, and we drew candy and played some more.

We are sorry to say that Mrs. Anna Connor is confined to her bed with rheumatism.

Say, what is the reason we never hear from Lawley and Pleasant Grove any more?

Grandma Terry is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Varnell.

So I will ring off and see if this goes to the waste basket.

From the Cottage Window

By Dorothy Douglas

Gavin Cuthbert tossed feverishly about his great four-post bed, muttering broken sentences. His mother strained every nerve in an effort to catch the words. Perhaps her mother love could fathom some slight longing in her son's ravings.

As she bent over him to smooth his rumpled hair she caught the word "music." It was repeated again and again with an accent of longing.

Mrs. Cuthbert stood suddenly erect. Why had she been so dense? Gavin loved music and through his delirium his very soul was calling for it.

She quickly enumerated her musical friends and realized that her task would be difficult; it was August and the city's population was scattered broadcast. She and Mr. Cuthbert had returned from the Isle of Wight at the first intimation of their son's illness. They were now in "Kingscroft," their country estate in Mottingham.

To find some one who could wield the power of song? Mrs. Cuthbert's hand was on the bell to order the landau for her drive to the station when she stopped. An idea had suddenly presented itself.

Often when driving down the lane, Mrs. Cuthbert had heard a woman's voice emanating from a tiny, wistaria-covered cottage that nestled just off the road. Beyond the fact that a Mrs. Wallace and her daughter from America occupied "The Cottage," Mrs. Cuthbert's knowledge was limited. Feeling that the voice that came from the cottage would appeal to Gavin she did not hesitate in her purpose.

Ten minutes later, the heavy gate of the cottage swung back, admitting her to the sweet-smelling gardens. When a young girl with two thick braids of golden hair answered the fall of the brass knocker Mrs. Cuthbert faced a very beautiful picture framed in the low doorway. The wild-rose cheeks of the girl deepened in color; it was seldom that a stranger from the golden world called at the cottage However, she led Mrs. Cuthbert into a miniature drawing room which expressed the artistic temperament in every detail.

"I hope introductions are unnecessary in so small a community," began the elder woman with a smile.

"I have come on a peculiar mission," she continued, "but many things are permissible where illness calls—I am going to ask a very great favor of you, Miss Wallace."

"I hope Mr. Gavin is no—"

"No—he is no worse, but—he calls for music incessantly and I was at a loss what to do when I remembered having heard a glorious voice creeping through these little casement windows." Mrs. Cuthbert turned with a charming gesture to indicate the windows, around which rose buds were peeping.

When her gaze returned to the girl she was startled by the change in her. The eyes glowed with an intense fire, the slight figure was drawn and tense while her entire being expressed latent emotion. Mrs. Cuthbert was no longer in doubt as to the owner of the voice; this girl was music incarnate. She arose and went to the girl.

"Will you come and sing to my son?" she asked.

The wistful appeal in the mother's eyes went straight to the girl's heart.

"I shall come with you as soon as I can wind up my hair."

"It looks so pretty as it is," coaxed Gavin's mother, running a hand down two silky braids, "and—it can't have been 'up' very long"—

She had her way and a few moments later Ruby Wallace was sitting at Gavin's piano which was visible through the doorway of his private sitting room. Like the ripple of a woodland brook, the prelude to an old negro melody drifted into the room. Her voice was not ordinary; in fact, it was very rare, possessing the quality of tone that goes right to the heart and lightens the shadows of life. As she sang, the patient became interested, then calm, and finally the dull apathy faded from his eyes and they closed into tranquil sleep. A deep sigh of relief escaped Mrs. Cuthbert and she, too, was soon lost in a long-needed rest. A tear glistened on her lashes and Ruby Wallace, seeing it and the sleeping man, knew that she had won one of the greatest triumphs of her life. She played on, from one melody to another.

Gavin's eyes opened slowly; they rested on the profile of a girl who seemed to be all delft blue and gold: as sunrise of gold above on her head and trailed down her back where it ended in two silky tassels. Gavin raised himself on one arm and tried to see if the eyes of this picture matched the gown. His concentrated gaze drew her attention and she turned to meet his eyes.

"Yes, they are blue—a tone darker than—Come here!" he called. Then, when she stood beside him: "Are you—real?" With a whimsical smile he stretched out a doubting hand.

Ruby smiled. "Oh, yes, very, very real."

"You know," he continued, holding fast to her hand, "I imagined that I was entering another world and that you were there to welcome me with your music, but—" his voice became softer—"you have brought me to life in our own world." He raised her hands to his lips before letting them go. "Where is mother?"

His mother had risen at sound of her name and dropped on her knees beside the bed. "My son."

"Little mother—it is good—to be back with you," he said.

The girl went quietly out.

The following days saw Ruby at the patient's piano very often. And it was not long before he was ushered back to the glory and strength of life.

Late one afternoon when they had finished tea and the twilight shades added harmony to an already great friendship, Gavin voiced a well matured thought. Under the lightness of his words his voice rang with a steadiness of purpose.

"Miss Wallace, I am going to inflict a heavy punishment on your arts for having wielded their powers over me when I was too ill to resist." He looked up to meet an interested glance from his mother and a startled one from the girl. "I shall send you to some terrible music master who will make you breathe from your diaphragm and place tones in your head until you are completely his slave. When that is accomplished—you are to come back and show the world of art what a really great voice is."

The girl was silent; two large tears gathered in her eyes. When she spoke her voice was low but the quality spoke volumes. "I can say nothing—at present—you have made too much possible—all at once. I have longed for what you have put before me and now—I—I want only—to cry."

"There, there," said Mrs. Cuthbert, rising. "If you must cry—cry here on my shoulder."

"But I'm not going to," came a muffled voice. "I am too happy to cry."

Not many twilights had come and gone before Gavin and his mother were again alone; each knew a great longing for the music of one voice. For in the heart of the mother Ruby Wallace had wrought a great love—and in the man's?

Something told Gavin that it was best not to tell the girl until such time as she herself beckoned him. Her letters from Germany were filled with humorous, and sometimes tearful, accounts of her studies and always, intermingling, were little phrases of love and gratitude for those who were her benefactors.

Somehow these letters invariably found a place in Gavin's desk until the day came when he had to resort to his steamer trunk—for sheer lack of space. Such was the passage of time.

One evening, after three years had passed, Gavin stepped into the drawing room looking so handsome in his evening clothes that even his mother stopped to caress him before putting the question uppermost in her mind. Gavin thought her wonderfully lovely, radiant with some inner excitement.

"Have you any engagement to-night, dear?" she asked.

"None; anything special?"

"Would you mind taking me to the opera to-night?"

"The opera! I thought you—mother! What is it?—you are hiding—!" Then suddenly: "I know! She is—"

"Yes, boy—Ruby is singing Juliet. She sent me word to-day with this." Mrs. Cuthbert drew a scarf from her neck, disclosing an exquisite necklace. It represented a few bars of music; the lines were fine golden strands held together by the bars of tiny diamonds; each note was a matchless pearl.

"It is beautiful!" Gavin turned away his head quickly—the girl seemed suddenly very near and a great gladness thrilled him.

"My boy," said his mother, tenderly, "you need not hide it from me—I have always known."

He turned and caught her in his arms.

Gavin sat far back in the box. He seemed to be chained down waiting for the entrance of Juliet—only the sight of her could release him.

His heart gave a great bound for she was there and his whole being went out to meet her. Every note, every gesture was like a long drawn breath from a garden of flowers to the man who waited.

She was the same Ruby whose voice had coaxed him back to life. Now she stood leaning over the balcony with a moon casting its light on her head and trailed down her back—and yes—it ended in two golden tassels. Gavin's hands clenched on the velvet of the box railing when the Romeo of the opera clasped Juliet in what looked like an unnecessarily close embrace, but that memory vanished when, afterward, Juliet sat beside him in the carriage so close that the soft down of her cloak was warm against his arm.

He slipped that arm under the coat and drew her to him. "I have waited three years—dear," he said.

She did not speak, but somehow there in the darkness of the carriage, he knew that he need wait no longer.

RECORD IN PICTURE TAKING

Remarkable Achievement of Mr. F. Dundas Todd, a Victoria (B. C.) Photographer.

Victoria, B. C.—What is stated to be the longest distance photograph ever produced was recently taken from Victoria, the subject matter being Mount Baker, distant from here 75 miles. The photographer, F. Dundas Todd, spent 18 months before he finally was successful in taking his subject, walking each morning during that time to the top of Reservoir hill. On a clear, calm morning, when the towering summit of the Cascades was clearly defined against the sky-line, 12 photographs were taken from Shotbolt's hill, Mr. Todd having decided upon this point after many futile visits to Reservoir hill.

The record longest distance photograph previously taken was one in Switzerland, over a distance of 65 miles. The present picture covers 75 miles, and whereas the former was taken over land the latter possesses the drawback of having had to shoot across 40 miles of water, which produces a mirage effect in photos. In Mr. Todd's photograph eight or nine planes of different values are clearly defined. First is seen the land below Shotbolt's hill, then a sheet of water broken by Discovery and Chatham islands; beyond these more water, and then the end of San Juan island, on which a house is distinctly visible. Further away still a portion of Lopez island is discernible, then come the foothills of the Cascades, while crowning all, standing out in clear and distinct relief in all its snowclad majesty, is Mount Baker.

The picture was taken at midday during two hours of absolute calm. The camera was an old one, invented some twenty years ago. The focal lens was 68 inches in length. Special plates were used. The ray filter with which the photograph was taken was designed by Prof. Wallace of Yerkes Observatory, who presented it to Mr. Todd.

Mr. Todd has won several medals for photographs he has taken in Scotland, England and the United States.

Another Food Boycott.

When an olive-colored touring car as big as a coal gondola drew up in front of a stall at the market house there was some lively stepping by the marketeers. The man at the wheel wore a huge bearskin coat that must have set him back $300; the female occupant was attired in a sealskin that was the exact duplicate of a thousand-dollar bill, while every bark of the big machine proclaimed that it took $7,000 to pry it loose from its makers. The woman approached the stall.

"How much are strawberries?" she inquired.

"Seventy-five a basket," replied the market man.

"S-e-v-e-n-t-y-f-i-v-e c-e-n-t-s!" gasped the woman. "Well! It's simply outrageous the way food products stay up."

And an instant later the sealskin and the bearskin, and the olive-colored car had flounced around the corner in a vanishing cloud of gasoline vapor, and another food boycott was on.—Pittsburg Times-Gazette.

Cracklin' Bread.

In a divorce case at Mexico the plaintiff criticised his wife's cooking and complained that she put "cracklin' bread" before him to eat. His lawyer was laying great stress upon this point and was particularly severe with the wife for serving this homely yet savory bread, which is peculiarly palatable to native Missourians, when Judge Barnett interrupted him with the question:

"Mr. Attorney, did you ever eat 'cracklin' bread?"

"No, sir," came the prompt and somewhat emphatic reply.

"I thought not," said the judge, and there was a ripple of laughter all over the courtroom, which showed that "cracklin' bread" was not foreign to the appetites of those present, including the court.

Cures Dyspepsia; Trial Is Free

It is a popular mistake that only wealthy people who eat rich and highly-spiced foods suffer from dyspepsia, or, as it is also known, indigestion. The laborer in the street, the worker in the field also finds himself a victim of this disorder. Among the very greatest sufferers from it are women.

Dyspepsia is indicated by a constant feeling of laziness, by loss of appetite and troubled sleep, by sour stomach and distress after eating, by bad complexion and lusterless eyes.

There is no surer and speedier cure for this trouble than Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which dyspeptics have been using successfully for twenty years. This great herb laxative compound cured Capt. Clark, of Buffalo, Ia., of dyspepsia and sour stomach that he had had for forty years, or until the lucky day that he heard of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It cured Joel Adams, of Montgomery, Ala., after suffering continuously for sixteen months. These are only a few of the many. But it is not expensive to be cured with this grand remedy, as it can be bought at any drug store in a 50-cent or $1 bottle.

Your very neighbors are probably lifelong users of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, but if you want to know without expense what it will do for you personally, send your name to Dr. Caldwell and he will be glad to send you a free trial bottle. He is actually anxious to have you make a test of his remedy.

Thousands of families everywhere keep it in the house against such an emergency as constipation, sour stomach, indigestion, biliousness, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, etc., which may come on a member of the family any day. It is pleasant to the taste, acts gently and does not gripe. It is the great children's laxative tonic.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 350 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

New Yorker Realized for the First Time Just How He Looked to His Friends.

"When in Chicago last week," said the New York traveling salesman, "I met a man who has been lost to the sight of New York friends for 15 years.

"'I had no notion of leaving home for good,' he said. 'I just came west for a little lark, and expected to return in a few weeks. But when I read a description of myself in the advertisements the folks distributed all over the country, I made up my mind I would never go back. If I look like that,' I said, 'it's time I hid away somewhere.' 'Has deep-set eyes,' those advertisements said, 'protruding front teeth, a scar on the left side of his nose, and freckled complexion.' What man, I ask you, would want to show himself again after being told he looked like that?'

"'But, Bill,' said I, 'under the circumstances facts were necessary. Your teeth are prominent, you have got a scar, and you are freckled.'

"To my mind Bill's sensitiveness affords a possible explanation of the absence of other mysteriously missing men. May not they, too, have been scared away by the extreme literalness of the description of themselves? Might not they, too, have come home if it had been 'softened a little for print?'"

What Others Say About It.

Many of the best people in Tennessee and adjoining states recommend St Joseph's Liver Regulator as being a splendid laxative and liver medicine. Its occasional use will keep the system in good condition, thus assisting nature to establish good health. It will remove the pile and effete matter from the system, and as a rule, Nature "will do the rest," Try it. It is well endorsed. It is made in both liquid and powders. Druggists and dealers sell it, liquid, 50 cents a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25 cents a box. Upchurch Drug co.

Temperance Lesson

Sunday School Lesson for May 8, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT—Proverbs 23:29-35. Memory verse, 31.

GOLDEN TEXT—"At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder."—Prov. 23:32.

TIME—Solomon, who may have written this passage, reigned B. C. 990-930.

PLACE—Solomon reigned and wrote in Jerusalem.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

Subject: The Victorious Drink Demon and How to Conquer Him.

The Passage Explained.—Vs. 29-35. Some Searching Questions. Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow? Who hath contentions? Who hath babbling? Who hath wounds without cause? Who hath redness of eyes?

The Answer.—30. "They that tarry long at the wine," beginning early in the day and carousing till late at night. "They that go to seek mixed wine."

The Only Safety.—31. "Look not thou upon the wine." Do not take the first glass. Do not even go where it is. Do not put yourself within reach of its insidious allurements. Says the Arab proverb, "The contemplation of vice is vice." "When it is red,"—as it usually was in Palestine, though white and golden wine were not unknown. "When it giveth his color in the cup." "When it moveth itself aright."

The Drunkard's Degradation. His Lust.—33. "Thine eyes shall behold strange women." "Thine heart shall utter perverse things."

His Insensibility to Peril.—34. "Thou shalt be as he that lieth down in the midst of the sea," like a floating, half-drowned body, or a helpless man cast adrift in a little, wave-tossed boat. "Or as he that lieth" asleep "upon the top of a mast," in the most imminent danger from the exaggerated pitching of the ship, yet stupidly insensible to the peril.

His Enslavement to the Habit.—"When shall I awake?" The drunkard is eager to shake off the stupifying effects of his orgies, that he may be at it again. "I will seek it yet again."

What the Drink Demon Does to the Drunkard's Body.—Vs. 29, 34, 35. Our passage pictures the exterior harm done by alcohol, the stammering speech and bleared eyes, and unsteady gait, the numbing of all the senses. Modern science has discovered reasons why strong drink produces these awful physical results.

Alcohol Is a Poison.—"So is strychnine, so is arsenic, so is opium. It ranks with these agents. Health is always in some way or other injured by it; benefited by it—never."—Sir Andrew Clark, M. D.

Alcohol Is Not a Food.—Experiments made upon a man kept in an air-tight glass cage and fed with two or three ounces of alcohol a day in addition to his other drink and his food have seemed to show that the alcohol did not reduce the system but yielded energy, acting as fat, sugar and starch would have acted. But the experiment proved nothing in favor of the use of alcohol as a beverage.

Alcohol Does Not Help Men Work.—"As a work-producer, alcohol is exceedingly extravagant, and, like other extravagant measures, it is apt to lead to a physical bankruptcy. It is well known that troops cannot march on alcohol."—Sir Frederick Treves.

What the Drink Demon Does to the Drunkard's Soul.—Vs. 29, 33, 35, 32. Our passage paints the passion which wine inflames, the lust to which it excites men, its terrible slavery, the awful wretchedness of the victim, and the final decay and death of all the spiritual powers that makes a man.

Alcohol and Crime.—The committee of fifty, eminent American scholars that undertook the scientific investigation of the liquor question a few years ago, examined into 13,402 cases of crime, and discovered intemperance to be the sole or predominating cause in 6,179 cases—nearly one-third—while intemperance was a contributing cause in 2,515 additional cases, making half of the whole number of cases in which intemperance appeared as a factor. Statistics of the arrests made in most of our large cities show half of them, or more than half, due to drunkenness. For Boston, for instance, in 1900, out of 43,033 arrests 27,792 were for drunkenness.

Alcohol and Suicide.—Dr. W. Kurbitz has made investigations, extending over 2½ years, in the clinic for mental diseases in Koenigsberg concerning the history of patients who have committed suicide. Among 57 such patients there were 20 who were pronounced alcoholics.

Alcohol and Genius.—"Remember that liquor cost Scotland her greatest poet, Burns; cost England her greatest all round man, Coleridge; made her two greatest orators gamblers and paupers and inmates of a jail; dimmed the glory of our Webster, quenched the torch committed to the hands of a man like Stephen A. Douglas."—Newell Dwight Hillis, D. D.

The greatest general of modern times, U. S. Grant, fought his greatest fight against the terrible appetite for strong drink that had seized upon him. His son, Maj Gen. Frederick D. Grant, an outspoken abstainer, says: "Drink is the greatest curse of Christendom, because practically all crime and all disaster are the result of it. Ninety-five per cent—I will make it no less—of desertions and acts of lawlessness in the army is due to drink. Vice is simply drink in another form. Who ever heard of a saloon completely divorced from the 'white slave traffic,' or a house of infamy without a bar? You may tell the young men that Gen. Grant does not drink a drop of liquor—has not for 18 years."

GOOD CURRYCOMB AND BRUSH

Does Work with One Stroke, Saving Much Time—Handle Is Removable at Pleasure.

The object of most inventions is a saving of time or labor or both. The man who succeeds in doing this usually finds a market for his invention, so it would seem that the California man who designed the combination currycomb and brush has made himself solid with the rural vote. This apparatus consists of an ordinary currycomb plate with a projection extending from the handle, and a brush with a hollow handle. To make the combination all that is necessary is to thrust the handle of the comb into the handle of the brush and one implement is formed. Instead, then, of raking a horse with the currycomb and going over him again with the brush, the whole operation can be performed with one stroke by passing the brush portion of the new implement over the path left by the preceding stroke of the comb when the next sweep of the comb is made. In this way two horses can be cleaned in the time it used to take to groom one.

ADVANTAGES OF THE SILAGE

Experiments Demonstrate That Field of Corn Will Yield $33 per Acre —Use in Fattening.

(BY PROF. D. H. OTIS, UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN.)

Of the various feeds which are the most palatable corn silage is without doubt the cheapest and most effective ration. It is a valuable feed for dairy and beef cattle and also for horses, calves and sheep. Many of the leading Wisconsin farmers find that silage can be handled as cheap, if not cheaper, than the corn crop can be handled in the usual manner. Silage furnishes a succulent feed with very little waste and is always ready to use.

In combination with alfalfa or clover, with a mixture of corn or barley for grain, silage furnishes an especially good ration, all grown on the farm and cheaper than mill feeds. The importance of palatability cannot be overestimated, as it increases the amount of feed eaten and, when properly assimilated, the more the animal eats the larger product it will return.

A ton of mixed hay occupies 400 cubic feet of space and eight tons of corn silage can be put in the same amount of room. The ton of mixed hay contains about 960 pounds of digestible dry matter, while eight tons of silage contain 2,560 pounds of dry matter. This one point of the economical storage of the corn crop, when put up in the form of silage, is worthy of attention where a large number of animals are fed.

The advantages of feeding silage during periods of drought is fully appreciated by those who have tried it. During the latter part of last summer Wisconsin suffered a severe drought and corn silage was fed to the university dairy herd. The flow of milk was never kept up so well during the summer as it was by the use of this silage. The summer silo is sure to become a more important factor in successful dairying.

The use of silage for fattening beef cattle has been tested at a number of experiment stations and by stockmen with excellent results. In experiments conducted by the writer it was found that silage fed steers sold at $4.95 per 100 pounds, while those fed no silage brought only $4.70 per 100 pounds, a gain of 25 cents in favor of silage fed animals. It was found that for every 100 pounds of gain 471 pounds of silage fed saved 18 pounds of grain and 156 pounds of alfalfa.

In these tests silage was fed in connection with alfalfa hay, corn chop, Kafir corn chop and cottonseed meal. The average soil, in unusual seasons, will produce 12 to 15 tons of green corn per acre. Even with a yield of 10 tons per acre there is an income, according to this experiment, of about $33 per acre.

The financial statement of this experiment showed that the silage fed steers made a profit of $4.10 per head, while the same grade of steers fed on the same feed except silage lost $1.47 per head.

Nothing Wasted with Sheep.

Nothing need be wasted on the farm where sheep are kept—tufts of grass, weeds and aftermaths and odd bits of feed can all be utilized and converted into wool and mutton.

Bad Habits of Colts.

Look out for bad habits in your colts. It is so much easier to keep them out than it is to get rid of them if they once get a hold on the young horse.

There is no guess-work, no uncertainty, about this world-famous remedy. Since first prescribed by Dr. D. Jayne 70 years ago it has brought relief and effected cures in millions of cases of disease, and is today known and used in all parts of the world.

ART AT $600 A SQUARE INCH

That Price Has Been Demanded for Drawing by the Famous Leonardo da Vinci.

Let no one say that art does not pay when right in Fifth avenue it is offered at $600 the square inch, which is considerably more than the lots that front in that exclusive thoroughfare would bring.

Stroll into the new galleries at 636, and in a dingy little frame, with several other patches, you will see a drawing by Leonardo da Vinci in red chalk. It is only 3¼ inches square, and, taking out the trimming of its upper corners, it contains ten square inches.

The price is $6,000. It is entitled "The Head of a Young Man," and, small as it is, the skill of the Italian painter inspires every line of the tiny masterpiece.

There is not far away a small drawing by Rembrandt, which is there through the courtesy of the new owner, who bought it for $15,000 before the dealers had a chance to hang it and has permitted it to remain in the show. The drawing, partly in sepia and here and there with a touch of crayon, was intended as a study for a painting and is entitled "Christ and the Two Apostles." It is eight by ten inches.—New York Herald.

A Revere Bell.

Gorham, Mass., has discovered in the belfry of the First Parish church a genuine Revere bell. Its inscription reads: "Revere-Boston-1822." Old records show that it cost $500 and was first hung June 7, 1822. This bell, which has done such excellent service during the last 88 years, is now apparently in perfect condition and rings out as true and clear as in days of yore.

Get on the water wagon—it has arrived in the good town of Clanton.

Next week Circuit Court will take the attention of the people of Chilton; make your headquarters at the Banner office and take another look at the whirling machinery of the only newspaper printed in Chilton county.

It would appear to be reasonable if the official count could be made within forty-eight hours after the close of the polls, there seems no good reason for delaying the count, and it would be more satisfactory to the voters to know as soon as possible. The count will be made on Friday and will be published in The Banner next week.

Chief Justice J. R. Dowdell's renomination is more than assured. He will get a comfortable majority over Judge C. C. NeSmith.

Judge Pearson is secure for another term, his majority being about one thousand votes.

D. D. Askew is victorious in the race for the district solicitorship.

Authoress at Work.

An amusing confession was made some time ago by the Baroness Von Hutten, the authoress of "Pam," who is appearing as Aunt Imogen in "Pinkie and the Fairies" at His Majesty's. The baroness does most of her writing at her home in Germany, a stronghold with the romantic name of Schloss Steinbach, and thinks nothing of working eight or ten hours without a break. "After a really hard day's work,' she said, "I am almost unrecognizable, for I always succeed in some unaccountable way in covering myself with ink. My appearance on these occasions is a standing joke, and my children have nicknamed me "Mrs Jellyby.'" The baroness has always been devoted to music. She has studied under the best masters in Florence, and finds great enjoyment in singing Italian opera.—Tit-Bits.

Wet Time at a Wedding.

In concluding an account of "a quiet wedding," a western Kansas paper says: "J. J. Anderson, father of the bride, who never before had shed a tear, found several of them rolling down his sunburned cheeks as he came forward to kiss the bride, remarking that she was his 'last baby.' Immediately several of the ladies began to shed tears, everybody was somewhat excited, and in the slight confusion the writer hereof found himself embracing a lady who stood conveniently near and who proved not to be his wife. He immediately apologized to the lady and was forgiven. He apologized again later to his wife, with no very definite returns up to this date."—Kansas City Star.

Japanese Day Nurseries.

Mrs. Arthur M. Dodge, president of the National Association of Day Nurseries, is shortly to deliver a large number of handkerchiefs as a present to the babies of the day nurseries of Japan. The handkerchiefs were contributed by a Chicago woman. According to Mrs. Dodge's report, there are but two day nurseries in the whole of Japan, and at one of them only two of the 20 babies cared for go home at night. There is a Japanese woman at the head of the institution and the mothers of most of the babies are serving sentences in prison. The other day nursery is in Yokohama and is managed by an English woman. A third is being arranged for in Okayama, a large factory town, by Miss Adams, a missionary, who has recently returned from her American home.

The Umpire at Home.

"Billy Evans sat alone in his home the other evening meditating on the approaching baseball season which means his return to the arduous umpiring pursuit.

He was thinking of a number of vexatious features of his calling, when his thoughts were interrupted by the ringing of the telephone bell. Some woman desired to talk to Evans' wife, who did not happen to be at home.

"She's out!" shouted Evans, absentmindedly, in such a thunderous tone that he nearly ruined the poor woman's ear drum.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

In Loving Memory of Mrs. Nettie Wright.

On Sunday evening, April 24, as the sun was sinking in the western horizon, and as the dark shades of the evening were hovering near, God in His infinite goodness took the spirit of Mrs. Wright to its eternal resting place. At the time of her death her home was in LaGrange, Ga., though most of her life was spent in Alabama. On Monday the remains were carried to Prattville, Ala., (her former home) and interred in the Prattville cemetery. She was about forty-one years old. She was a devoted wife, a loving mother and a consecrated christian. A husband and ten children survive her. I could say many things, but it is enough to say that she is safe in the arms of Jesus. I will offer the following piece of poetry as words of consolation to the dear family:

On an April Sunday evening
As the sun was sinking low,
God to heaven did call a loved one
From this earth of want and woe.

Yes, He took a loving mother
From her loved ones here below
To a home of love supernal
Where no bitter tears are flow.

But oh, the joy that she was ready
For the summons from on high,
And she's anchored, safely anchored
In that land of by-and-by.

Now from toil she has been taken
To a home where God doth dwell,
And she'll see her loving Saviour
In that home where all is well.

Oh we miss her, yes, we miss her,
There's no one here to fill her place, g ut she's resting, sweetly resting
On the Saviour's loving breast.

Oh, the home that's been made vacant
Is so lonely now, I know,
But the Saviour's called your mother,
To a better one to go.

To the loved ones that now miss her
In this toilsome world below,
Let us strive to live for Jesus,
And meet where flowers forever grow.

Meet our loved ones o'er the river,
Just across the bridge of gold;
She'll be waiting for our coming,
Safe within the heanenly fold.

Yes, the thought, we'll meet our loved one
In a home to part no more
In a last ng consolation
That we cherish and adore.

Yes, I think that we'll be ready
When our Saviour calls home
To meet our loved one up in heaven there,
No more this earth to roam.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

Guns with Double Tubes.

Henceforth all sea coast guns of six-inch caliber or over, except mortars, will be provided with double tubes, so that, should the inner tube give way, the damage will not extend to the outer tube and the enveloping jacket and hoops. This will permit the restoration at small cost of guns whose tubes give way and will facilitate the rehabilitation of guns whose accuracy has been lost through erosion and wear of bore.

Maplesville.

Married at the residence of the bride's parents, April 24th, Miss Gussie Jones to Mr. C. N. Huggins, Rev Simmons officiating. Miss Jones is one of the most charming young ladies of Maplesville, endowed with the many fine traits of character that adorn and beautify true womanhood. Mr. Huggins is the popular stenographer of the Twin Tree Lumber Co., and is to congratulated on winning such a prize. They left soon after the ceremony for Montgomery the former home of the groom, to visit relatives. The best wishes of many friends will follow them, as evidenced by the large number that went to the depot to see them off and shower rice on them. May the sunlight of happiness ever radiate their pathway through life.

The many friends of Miss Jennie Wilson will be glad to know that she is much improved after two months illness, and is expected soon to resume her school.

Mr. and Mrs. Kroll, after spending some time at Maplesville, will soon return to their home in Michigan. Mr. Kroll is a stockholder in the Twin Tree Lumber Co., and has made several visits here; their friends regret to see them leave, and hope to see them again.

Messrs. Jones and Hollerbium who have been with the Twin Tree Lumber Co. for a long while, will soon leave Maplesville, they with their families, have made many friends here, who while regretting to see them go, wish for them happiness and prosperity in their new homes.

Mrs. Parnell, and Master Leighton Parnell have been visiting in Mobile.

Mrs. A. Foshee has returned home after spending a week with Mrs. Sneed in Centerville.

Little Don Crum is looking forward with bright anticipation to a visit to her cousin in Waycross, Ga.

Mooday the State and county officers will be nominated, and we hope the men best fitted to fill the offices will be the fortunate ones. With all respects to the Banner, we hope Mr. Mallory will be nominated for Governor, as we think he is the man to fill the place, he is a man of fine character, a good christian, his opponents can not bring anything to tarnish his good name, and we feel sure he would make an ideal Governor.

In Memory.

Last Saturday night about 9:30 o'clock God in His infinite wisdom saw fit to send the cold and icy hand of death to visit the home of Mr. and Mrs. Willie Jones and carry from this world of sin and sorrow their infant babe, Houston, to that bright world above, where sin is unknown and parting is no more.

All that father, mother, relatives, friends, and faithful physicians could do was done to save it, but God said it was His.

It was sick only one and a half days, but bore its suffering well until the end came.

We know that little Houston is resting in those mansions above, where God can administer unto its needs more than father or mother ever could, even though they loved it so much.

Its remains were laid to rest in Providence cemetery, Rev. M. J. Parrish conducting the funeral services.

Many weeping relatives and friends followed it to its last resting place.

Weep not, dear friends, for our loss is heaven's gain.

ALL DRUGGISTS

IN MEMORY.

Year of 1910 the death angel visited the home of my dear grandfather Moses Moore the 17th day of April at 7:00 o'clock and carried him away to that great beyond. He leaves a wife, four daughters, two sons and a host of grandchildren to mourn his loss. He was laid to rest at his old home cemetery. He was eighty-seven years old and had lived in the Baptist church twenty-five years and was a loving member of the church. But he has past away to that happy dwelling place where there is no sickness or pains or death. He is sleeping sweetly sleeping with our blessed Jesus where he will never wake no more, he was confined to his bed a year and five months when the Lord saw fit to call him from this world of sorrow to that sweet home above. But how we miss thee, for there is a vacant place that never can be filled, and since it is God's holy will we must be parted for awhile, in sweet submission we will say our Father's will be done.

LULA THOMAS.

IN MEMORIAM

On Sunday morning, April 24, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Walker and bore away the soul of their beloved son, Willie Walker. He was about twelve years of age. He leaves a father, mother and brother and a host of friends and relatives to mourn his departure. Weep not, dear bereaved ones, for your loss is heaven's gain. He only budded on earth to bloom in heaven. Oh, how sad it was to give little Willie up. He was just in the bloom of childhood. 'Tis so hard for his friends to give him up; no one on earth can take dear Willie's place. He was loved by everybody; he gained friends everywhere he went; he was good and kind to everybody he met, and tried to do what was right in every way he could. I also thank the good people for their kindness. Only here today and gone tomorrow; dead and gone but not forgotten.

Hull, May 1, 1910.

Editor Banner:—Please admit me again to the columns of the Banner, and I will tell my friends over in Chilton county something about my new home. Hull is situated on the A. Z. S. R. R., ten miles south of Tuscaloosa. This is a prosperous little saw mill town and contains enough people to run the mill alright. There is some farming caried on here. This is fine farming country, the land is level and fertile. The people are kind and clever. Churches are scarce at present, the nearest is two miles, so you can guess at the balance. It is a common thing to hear a gun shoot on the Sabbath day, there being some game here, squirrels rabbits, birds andthis is a fine country for fish. It is only one mile from the Black Warrior river and about the same distance to the Blocker Lake which is about one hundred and fifty miles wide and about one mile and a half long, the water averaging eight feet deep, and the people catch quite a lot of fish here, but ahe most serious thing about it is that they spend the Sabbath day there out there fishing, not less than fifty people are out there this evening fishing on the lake and river. Some of our Chilton county boys are here with me and went over to the lake this morning took a bath in the river, but I am thankful to say that they did not forget their home framing and join the fiishing party. I saw quite a lot of men and women come down from Tuscaloosa on the train this morning and go out to the lake to fish. Shame to the preachers of Tuscaloosa county for they are not doing what they ought to do. The young men sit around in squads playing cards, telling vulgar tales and curse. Most of them meet the train as it comes on Saturday night and morning and buy whiskey enough to run them through Saturday night and Sunday. But I must say that there are some people here who are above that, who do not drink or fish on Sunday. It is also common to see a negro out on the mill yard with a pair of mules and a wagon hauling wood on Sunday, and all the men who work about the mill on Sunday get regular employment. Religion is very scarce here and those that have got it is not working at it much; I reckon they think these bad people would get some of it and they would not have enough to do them. Well, I never hear anything about politics, I do not think the people care anything for such things.

What Physicians Say.

Mr. Nesmith, of Nesmith, S. C., writes that "he recommended U-RA CURA to a physician who had failed of a cure with other remedies and that he has discarded other medicines and is showing wonderful improvements since he commenced taking U-RA CURA." Many physicians recommend this remedy to their patients who are suffering from Kidney and Bladder troubles. Large numbers of unsolicited testimonials have been received from those who have been cured. Druggists sell it at 50 cents and $1.00 a bottle. If your Druggist can not supply you, write to the Granger Medicine Co, Chattanooga, Tenn.

TRULY OUR SICK FRIENDS

ONE DAY ONLY

8 A. M. TO 8 P. M.

FREE

This Institute, composed of a group of regularly graduated physicians and surgeons, licensed, legally chartered and incorporated under the laws of the State of Ohio, sends at its own expense these eminent medical specialists in order to introduce the newest methods and discoveries in medicine and surgery, such as the system of treatment under X ray, Violet ray, Finsen ray, Hydrotherapy, Etc., to give to those who call on the above date, consultation, examination, advice and all medicines required to complete a cure, absolutely free. These specialists will diagnose your case and give you the benefit of their skill and medical knowledge.

There is in this case no experimenting or guess work at your expense. You will be told whether you can be cured or not. If your case is curable they will put you under treatment immediately; if incurable they will give you such advice as may prolong your life. Their treatment always gives quick relief, and ultimately positively cures. Being prepared to cope with each individual case the human system is thoroughly cleansed of the disease in a natural and direct manner, and improvement is noticed at once; even the worst cases are treated without any inconvenience to the patient or the pursuing of his or her daily vocation.

If you are improving under your family physician, do not come and take up their valuable time, as they absolutely refuse to treat any one who is under the care of the local physicians. They wish besides to give each patient plenty of time and their undivided attention, but can not listen to long stories not pertaining to your trouble. They have discarded the old methods and remedies used for ages by the medical world, and which it would be folly to depend upon any longer, for they are not known to cure, as thousands die, depending on them for relief. The following list of diseases only are taken under treatment, to-wit: Diseases of the Nervous System, Heart, Stomach, Lungs, Kidneys, Catarrh, (purulent or dry), Consumption, Epilepsy, Deafness, Diseases of Women, Tumors, Pseudo Cancers, Piles, of a Chronic Nature only. They treat Deafness by an entirely new method, and hearing in many cases is restored at once. Catarrh in all its varied forms, like other diseases if once taken under treatment, is cured permanently to remain so and to never return. It matters not whom you have seen, or with whom treated, do not fail to call, as a visit will cost you nothing, and may restore you to health, or even save or prolong your life, as thousands of persons will testify by unassailable testimonials in all parts of the country. If you suspect Kidney Trouble, bring a two ounce bottle of your Urine for chemical and microscopical analysis.

REMEMBER!—The free offer is during this visit only, and will not be repeated. Persons commencing treatment upon their future visits will be required to pay, but not one cent will be asked from those commencing treatment during this visit for any medicine necessary to effect a cure, irrespective of your position in life, or the number of those who come on above date. Whensoever, or by whom wanted, a positive guarantee to cure will be given under their system of treatment. Those having long standing and complicated disease, who have failed to get well and become discouraged, are particularly invited to call.

NOTICE: — Married ladies without their HUSBANDS, and minors without their FATHERS, will positively not be admitted to consultation unless accompanied by one of their local physicians.

Office Hours: 9 A. M. to 7:30 P. M.

BLOW TO THE TRUTS

United States Grand Jury Returns Indictments.

HEARING HELD IN SAVANNAH

Indictments Have Been Returned Against Several Large Concerns, Alleging a Conspiracy in Restraint of Business, Trade and Commerce.

Savannah, Ga.—As a result of the investigation which has been carried on by the federal grand jury here for several days into the prices of meats in Savannah and the causes for them, an indictment was rendered against five of the big packing houses and three men, local managers of three of the packing houses, as individuals.

Brought by Speer's Charge.

The investigation is brought against Cudahy & Co, the Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Beef Company, Swift & Co., the Armour Packing Company and the Nelson Morris Company, as corporations, and Fred M. Hull, Jr., as local manager for the Nelson Morris Company, William D. Cooper, as local manager for Armour, and Emmet B. Adams, as local manager for Swift. The Savannah representatives of the two other packing houses named in the indictment are not mentioned.

The date of operations for which the indictment is brought is for the year 1908.

Conspiracy Charged.

It is alleged that the packing houses named in the indictment brought and slaughtered live stock at various points in the west and north, shipped fresh meats to Savannah, reduced the price of meats and sold them on the market at a loss. The result of the manipulation is a legal to-have compelled the South Atlantic Packing and Produce Company of Savannah to sell its product at a loss, and was conspiracy in restraint of business, trade and commerce. The intent of the larger packing houses is alleged to have been to force the local houses out of the field of competition.

Conspiracy Charged.

The [illegible] between June 10 and August 1, 1908, all of the defendants effected a combination whereby they fixed arbitrary non-competitive and exhorbitant prices for meats, thus eliminating that competition which should naturally exist among them.

William D. Cooper, one of the defendants, is now in Nashville, Tenn., and Fred M. Hull, Jr., is at Little Rock, Ark. It is expected that service will be perfected immediately on the defendants and bonds made.

MEMORIAL TO BOONE.

North Carolinians Honor the Memory of Famous Pioneer.

Salisbury, N. C.—To the memory of that famous pioneer, Daniel Boone, civilizer of the North Carolina and Kentucky wilderness, founder of Boonesborough, Ky., and central figure and hero in the many lo-hood stories of Indian fighting and hunting tales, memorials have been ceremoniously dedicated at Holman's Ford, near here. These promise to become a mecca for patriotic pilgrims.

On the historic spot where Boone spent nineteen years of his vigorous young manhood, hunting and resisting the skulking redskin, patriotic North Carolinians have erected on the exact site of the old homestead, a few hundred yards from the Yadkin river, a new log cabin, a replica of the one occupied by the intrepid hunter and his family. Directly in front of the simple building stands a handsome shaft of native Rowan granite forming an Indian arrow head 15 feet high and mounted upon a massive base. Ornamenting this is a bronze tablet bearing the name of Daniel Boone and the date of his residence in North Carolina. Both of these memorials were dedicated with appropriate ceremonies in which many of the direct descendants of Boone and a score of others who boast of their relationship to the pioneer participated.

ATTACKS GIRL, KILLS SELF.

Surrounded by Posse, Young Sent Bullet Into Brain.

New York.—To prevent capture after a vicious attack on Miss Anna Kipp, daughter of a bank cashier, Clarence Wood, 19 years old, of Rutherford, N. J., barricaded himself in the Rutherford Boat Club and for five hours fought off a posse composed of police and deputy sheriffs.

JEWS DRIVEN OUT.

Cruel Measures Taken Upon Them By Russian Government.

New York.—The Jewish Daily News has received cable advices to the effect that 2,500 Jewish families are being expelled from Kieff, Russia. This is being done by the government sanction, it is said.

Panic-stricken men, women and children are dragged from their beds and thrust out of the city destitute, the dispatches say. Heavy escorts of brutal soldiers are driving the refugees on foot to the settlements whence they came to Kieff.

The rigor of the persecution is added to by the fact that this is the week of the Jewish Passover festival.

These dispatches are verified by advices from Russia to the American Jewish committee and the German Relief society. The American committee has appealed to Secretary of State Knox to intercede with the Russian government.

Blame for this latest persecution is placed by the Jewish leaders upon the Russian prime minister, Stolypin, who, they declare, despite his contrary statements, is the bitterest enemy the Jewish race has had since the days of Von Plehve.

TWICE SAW HALLEY COMET.

Aged Georgian Recalls Viewing Celestial Wanderer in 1835.

Cordele, Ga.—John McArthur, of this city, enjoys the distinction of having looked upon Halley's comet twice.

At the age of nine, he remembers distinctly to have seen this wonderful visitor in the fall of 1835, while he was residing in Wilkerson county, at a "corn shucking," and the second time his eyes beheld it was in Cordele Wednesday morning, at the home of his son, Dr. A. L. McArthur. He is now 84 years of age and is hale and hearty for a man of his years.

A ROYAL RECEPTION

Belgium's Ruler Pays Roosevelt Special Attention.

GUEST AT THE LAEKEN PALACE

Former President of the United States Was Received With Extraordinary Honors When He Visited Brussels—King Pleased at Visit.

Brussels.—When Theodore Roosevelt arrived in Brussels he was received with royal honors and a vast crowd from all over Europe, as well as America, attracted primarily because of the exposition now on, greeted the party.

King Albert, of Belgium, unexpectedly greeted Colonel Theodore Roosevelt and paid him extraordinary honor by making him a guest at the royal palace.

The meeting between Mr. Roosevelt and the king occurred at the exposition, to which the ex-president was motored. King Albert went there to surprise the ex-president. The king appeared delighted to meet the man who has aroused all Europe to excitement. He insisted on taking Mr. Roosevelt along with him to the Laeken palace, on the outskirts of Brussels. The rest of the Roosevelt party family remained at the hotel over night.

As the court is still in mourning for the late King Leopold, the guests were compelled to appear in black.

EXPLOSION ON SHIP.

Five Men Killed on Southern Pacific Freight Steamer.

New Orleans.—Five men were killed April 23 by the explosion on the Southern Pacific freight steamer El Alba, which has been picked up in distress off the mouth of the Mississippi. This announcement was made when the steamer reached New Orleans.

All of the men who were killed were Portuguese, except Ericson, who was a Swede.

The El Alba left Galveston for New York April 22 with a cargo of onions. When twenty-three hours out a steam pipe in the boiler room burst, spreading death and destruction in that section of the vessel's hold. Several men were killed outright and others were scalded so severely that they died of their injuries within a few hours. When Captain Robert Quick compiled the death toll he found that he had lost five of his crew. The bodies were buried at sea.

GIRL SUES DENTIST.

Says Her Health Was Impaired by Gold Dropping in Lung.

Macon, Ga.—Miss Mary Garoughty has filed suit in the city court in this city against a prominent dentist for the recovery of $15,000 damages on account of the dropping of a gold cap for a crown into her throat. She charges that an employee in the dental parlors, while working on a crown in her mouth let the crown drop and it went into her lung. There, according to the charge, it remained a year, till last October, when, by a violent coughing spell, she coughed the gold cap back.

She claims that she has been injured in health by the crown having been in her lung.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Opening in riotous discord and closing in enthusiastic harmony, the Indiana democratic convention adopted Governor Marshall's proposal that it should indorse to next year's legislature a candidate for the United States senate, and named John W. Kern, who was the party's candidate for vice-president in 1908.

Josh Ashley Acquitted.

Greenville, S. C.—After deliberating one hour and twenty minutes, the jury trying Representative Joshua W. Ashley, of Anderson county, in the United States district court for peonage, returned a verdict of acquittal. Ashley had all along insisted that he was confident of vindication.

T. F. Grady, Who Will Quit N. Y. Senate to Head Order of Eagles.

COMET CAUSES CONCERN.

Knock-Out Blow for the World Feared by Superstitious.

Atlanta.—Among the superstitious, and especially the darkies, the appearance of Halley's comet is causing the utmost concern, and, in some instances, even terror. Already according to telegraphic reports, the negroes in certain sections of the Southern belt, hearing of the appoach of this celestial wanderer, have taken fright and, in their superstition and terror of they know not what, are holding meetings and resorting to all kinds of hoodoo charms in the hope that the mysterious wanderer of the sky may not bring about the crack of doom.

It is even reported two or three persons have taken their lives on account of an insane fear of what the comet might do to the earth.

This wanderer among the spheres can now be seen in the eastern sky at early dawn and will contiue to grow brighter in the spring and summer months until it completes its course around the sun and begins another long flight through space.

Unlike many other comets which pass around the sun and never return, Halley's comet has an orbit which is complete, and therefore it periodically returns.

Notwithstanding the fear and superstition aroused the astronomers and men of science agree that the awesome visitor will speed away, as in past ages, into distant space without material injury to our earth.

BRIBERY SCANDAL.

Railroad, Chicago Council and State Legislature Are Involved.

Chicago.—Investigation of an alleged bribery scandal involving the Chicago and Western Indiana railroad, the Illinois legislature, as composed two years ago, the city council of Chicago and sums of money which may run anywhere between $60,000 and treble that amount, has been ordered by State's Attorney Wayman here.

The state's attorney has ordered the empaneling of a special grand jury to conduct the investigation.

The trouble has been brewing for months. The state's attorney's action is based on allegations made by John C. Fetzer, who was sued by the Chicago and Western Indiana for the return of $525,000, of which amount the railroad company avers Fetzer defrauded it in real estate transactions.

Fetzer, in his turn, has asked for an injunction to enjoin the prosecution of this suit, alleging that parts of the money which the road seeks to recover went to influence legislation, both at Springfield and Chicago.

FARMERS' CONVENTION.

Over Ten Thousand Delegates Assemble at St. Louis.

St. Louis.—With ninety speakers on the program, each with a particular hobby to expound, the joint convention of the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union, which begins here Monday, is expected to set a new mark for future conventions in number of words and variety of ideas.

More than 150 applications for places on the program were received, but only ninety could be accommodated during the six days of the convention.

Between 10,000 and 15,000 delegates, representing more than seven million members of more than four hundred farmers' organizations, are expected to be present.

The list of speakers includes many prominent men, among them being President Taft, who speaks on Wednesday, and William Jennings Bryan, who comes Saturday.

FIGHT IN FAR EAST

Fierce Battle Between Turks and Albanian Rebels.

TEN THOUSAND WERE KILLED

Cablegrams Bring Accounts of a Most Sanguinary Battle Which Has Been Waged on the Plains of Kossovo, In Which Both Sides Suffered.

Salonika.—Five hundred Albanians, mostly women and children, have been killed in the Turkish bombardment of Godantz.

Constantinople.—Five thousand men on both sides have fallen in the three days' battle that has been waged on the plains of Kossovo between the Turkish troops and the Albanian rebels, according to semi-official statements. The rebels are said to have captured several guns. Lack of adequate means of communication continues, but the reticence of the Turkish authorities is regarded as an admission of the seriousness of the government's position.

Albania is in the western part of the Balkan peninsular, and covers an area of 22,000 square miles. The Albanians are only partly civilized and very warlike. The country is under control of Turkey.

DAMAGE OF MILLIONS.

Southern Farmers Have Been Dealt Severe Blow by the Cold.

New Orleans, La.—That the damage to the cotton crop in Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia by Sunday night's frost, storm and snow is fully as great as at first reported, is confirmed in full reports from all sections of these three states.

Louisiana planters suffered severely by the frost, but not as much as those in the northern and central parts of the belt. In Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi there may be little or no attempt to replant cotton where it was destroyed. The farmers will diversify their crops, turning to potatoes and truck. This plan, it is said, will be attempted in other parts of the cotton country. It means light crops, and maybe no limit to prices. In many sections of the cotton belt it is impossible to attempt to replant cotton because of the seed famine.

The mills can not attempt to supply the demand, for practically all the good seed was exhausted in the first planting.

What the damage will amount to in dollars is impossible to estimate, owing to the many ends to be considered. The young cotton crop is practically ruined. This concrete loss will run into millions for all sections south, while the loss bound to be sustained in an attempt at diversification of crops will be tremendous.

PAULHAN WINS PRIZE.

Aviator Makes Successful Flight From London to Manchester.

London.—The Frenchman, Louis Paulhan, whose efforts have frequently been crowned with victory, has won the greatest race in the history of mankind, and $50,000, when he flew into Manchester, having traveled by aeroplane from London, a distance by railway of more than 180 miles, with only a single overnight stop at Lichfield.

Found Dead Beside Track.

Atlanta.—C. S. Hollen, a printer, whose home was near Dalton, was found dead on the Southern road, a quarter of a mile south of Chattahoochee station. His head was crushed in and one arm was mashed. It is thought that he fell off a train and that the fall smashed his skull. The wheels probably passed over his arm.

Folding Bed Smothers Man.

The order is of great importance to railroads as interchangeable mileage tickets [illegible] to purchasers of such tickets.

In this order the commission says: "The right to use exchange and mileage tickets is in the nature of a privilege voluntarily granted by the carriers under their tariffs, must be accepted by those who use such special fares with all [illegible] nondiscriminatory limitations may be attached to them." Important points made by the commission are that the issuance of mileage tickets is in no sense necessary, but is permissive and voluntary on the part of the carriers; that purchasers of mileage tickets are not lawfully be considered as a special class, but must comply with the general law common to all passengers, and that purchasers of mileage tickets are bound by the lawful contract features of that [illegible] reduced rate transportation.

The commission goes so far as to hold that purchasers of special reduced rate transportation and mileage tickets, have no legal right to demand the same privileges and advantages that are accorded to the passenger who has paid the full fare at a higher rate. The [illegible] have never gone to this extent while making the mileage ticket regulation for their protection, but have ordered the same privileges and advantages to the purchasers of mileage tickets as are given to purchasers of other forms of transportation.

FINE OLD GRASSHOPPER VANE

On Faneuil Hall, Boston—Was Made by One of America's Earliest Wood Carvers.

Perched on the cupola of Faneuil hall, in Boston, is a grasshopper weather vane which is not only one of the oldest vanes in the country but is famous as the product of one of America's earliest wood carvers and artisans, Shem Drowne of Boston.

Drowne's shop was on Ann street, in the north end.

Of the many vanes he made only three are now known to be in existence—the one on the Shepard Memorial church in Cambridge, which formerly was on the steeple of the New Brick church on Hanover street, in this city, and known as the revenge vane; the one in the collection of the Massachusetts Historical society, a relic of the old Boston Province house, and the one on Faneuil hall.

This grasshopper of copper, hammered out by hand, has large, glassy eyes, which in the sunlight shine like fire. It was made in 1742, at the order of Peter Faneuil, when the hall, his gift to the town, was nearing completion, and for the last 167 years it has been a landmark.

It has not, however, lived a life of unbroken peace, for several times it has been near destruction. In 1775, when Boston was shaken by an earthquake, the vane fell to the ground, but after being supplied with a new leg by the son of the man who made it, it was replaced.

Five years later Faneuil hall was seriously damaged by fire, but the vane remained intact, and when the hall was rebuilt the grasshopper was once more given the place of honor.

Another disaster befell it when, in 1889, a flag was being raised to celebrate the anniversary of the evacuation of the city by the British, the hopper hopped to the street below. But in a few days he hopped right back again, and there he has remained ever since, with the exception of an occasional removal for repairs.

HELD MEETING IN GRAVEYARD

Young Suffragette Proved Her Right to Leadership and Her Fidelity to the Cause.

In a graveyard Miss Inez Milholland, Vassar graduate, suffragette, friend of the working girl, amateur actress and champion female shot-putter, executed her first and one of her cleverest strokes in her campaign of "Votes for Women."

It was during her days at Vassar college. Miss Milholland, on behalf of a band of enthusiastic suffragettes enrolled from the students, had invited several prominent leaders of the cause to address a mass meeting on the college campus. The news of the approaching event reached the ears of the faculty, and President Taylor issued a stringent edict forbidding the gathering. Miss Milholland was not daunted, however. A short distance from the college grounds was a graveyard. Collecting her forces, she moved into the cemetery and the speeches were delivered among the tombstones.—From an article in The World To-Day.

Busy Paris Dressmakers.

This is the period of great excitement in the world of dressmakers. The Rue de la Paix is in a bustle and turmoil from morning till evening; employers and first hands are screaming to lift boys and messengers, who are running wildly up and down stairs. Usually polite manageresses and obsequious doorkeepers receive even their best clients with scowls of disapproval, for all this unusual disorder and excitement is not on account of their clients. It is the private view which is being prepared—the dress rehearsal, as it were—of the coming season's fashions for the benefit of the buyers from big firms throughout the world—Russia, Vienna, America, London, Germany. These are the spring and summer fashions that are being lavished; it is already too late for the half-season styles. A fortnight hence the elite of society will also be let into their mysteries.

In Bad Fix

"I had a mishap at the age of 41, which left me in bad fix," writes Mrs. Georgia Usher, of Conyers, Ga. "I was unconscious for three days, and after that I would have fainting spells, dizziness, nervousness, sick headache, heart palpitation and many strange feelings. I suffered greatly with ailments due to the change of life and had 3 doctors, but they did no good, so I concluded to try Cardui. Since taking Cardui, I am so much better and can do all my housework."

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

Do not allow yourself to get into a bad fix. You might get so bad you would find it hard to get out. Better take Cardui while there is time, while you are in moderately good health, just to conserve your strength and keep you in tip top condition.

In this way your troubles, whatever they are, will gradually grow smaller instead of larger—you will be on the up-grade instead of the down—and by and bye you will arrive at the north pole of perfect health.

Iced water and eating too fast are the two chief causes of the so-called "American dyspepsia."

A medical journal says that if a few drops of carbolic acid be added to the tincture of iodine the iodine will not stain the human skin.

When a burn is caused by alkalis, as caustic potash or lime, then the application of acid is the proper treatment. Water and vinegar or diluted lemon juice is a near-at-hand remedy.

If your digestion is bad, starve yourself for a day or two, then go on a sensible diet, that is, avoid rich and greasy foods, and eating overmuch meat and sweets. Coffee is often ruinous to the digestion, as it makes many persons bilious.

If the circulation is at fault, first seek to improve it by exercise in the open air, avoidance of tight clothing, and deep breathing. Massage is also helpful. If all these remedies fail seek advice from a physician, as you may need digitalis, nitroglycerin or some other heart tonic.

Fur-Cleaning Hints.

White fur at this season is badly soiled. Instead of taking it to a professional cleaner, try filling fur with dampened white cornmeal, rubbing gently the way the fur lies; repeat until clean, and use dry meal to fluff the fur. Shake well to remove any dust. Dark fur can be freshened by bran made hot and rubbed well into the furs. Brush with a clean, not too stiff brush until the dull look is removed. When moistening meal for fur cleaning purposes use gasoline or benzine rather than water.

Triumph for Americans.

The English hostess for various reasons, the principal one being that she cannot help herself, now accepts the invasion of her American sister, the magnificence of her entertainments and the wonderful individuality of her costumes with equanimity, says a writer. The days are long since past when the American woman had difficulty in making a place for herself in English society, and past also are the days when she was treated as a curiosity and expected to act and talk after the manner of the immortal Daisy Miller. Nowadays she reigns supreme. In fact, it is fashionable to be American.

A Compliment Now.

"But, mamma, you told me never to call a person a pig."

"But, daughter, that was before the price went up."—Houston Post.

Commander Julius A. Pratt Post No. 143 Dept. Ill., G. A. R.

Mr. Isaac Cook, Commander of above Post, Kewanee, Ill., writes: "For a long time I was bothered with backache and pains across my kidneys. About two months ago I started taking Foley Kidney Pills and soon saw they were doing just as claimed. I kept taking them and now I am free from backache, and the painful bladder misery is all gone. I like Foley Kidney Pills so well that I have told many of my friends and comrades about them and shall recommend them at every opportunity." Upchurch Drug Co.

LET THE PEOPLE RULE.

VOL. XVIII | CLANTON, ALA., THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1910 | No. 32

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

The latest ornament to the town of Clanton is the water wagon and in due course of time it will probably be put into use, but at present it is on view to all beholders on a vacant lot next W. H. Sartor's store. Mr. J. D. Cooper suggests that it be named "Refresher," anyway it will be refreshing when it gets to work. Wednesday morning we were refreshed by the sight of the wagon gaily sprinkling our streets. Let the good work go on.

In a short time we shall know how much we have grown in the last ten years. The census enumerators are busily engaged in getting the figures and everyone should keep them along in their work. It is an interesting conjecture how much have we increased in population—both the county of Chilton and the town of Clanton. It is our idea that the latter will show a big increase, the growth of the town in the last few years has been remarkable, but we shall not hazard a guess, a few weeks will settle the question.

Have you seen the comet with its big long tail? Several good citizens report its arrival "Early is the morning before the break of day," but whether they stayed up all night to see it, or arose before three o'clock in the morning for that purpose, your historian cannot say sky.

"Jump out of bed, jump out of bed, for Laying long looks lazy,
If the morn be wet or dry or if it should be hazy;
Light or dark, get up with the lark,
Don't care for frost or hail,
Jump out of bed and take a look at the Comet's big long tail."

Maplesville, Ala., May 10, 1910.

Editor Banner:—Please permit me through your paper to tender my thanks to the people who supported me in the Democratic primary. I conducted a clean campaign and expect to continue to do the same.

For those who saw fit to oppose me I have no words of censure, they only exercise the privilege of choosing between the different aspirants for sheriff, and though the successful candidate I have no disposition to execute in their defeat, and whether elected or defeated in November, I can but feel grateful to those who stood by me. If selected by the people of Chilton county as sheriff in November, I can only promise equal rights to all and special favors to none, striving to conduct the office in such a way as to warrant the admiration of my friends and the respect of my enemies, should I be so unfortunate as to have any.

Respectfully,
B. L. JONES.

MURDER AT MAPLESVILLE

On Sunday morning the dead body of Mr. Cleve Houlditch was found on the tracks of the Southern railroad near Maplesville by the crew of a passing train, who carried the body to Maplesville. The throat of the unfortunate man had been cut and the head bashed in with a club, and the murderers had placed the body on the tracks, evidently with the idea of a train passing over it.

Suspicion was placed upon several negroes, and a trial was heard Sunday night before Justice of the Peace B. O. Glover, when Alice Sheppard and Wiley Young were committed to jail without bail.

A crowd of indignant citizens had formed and threats of lynching the culprits were freely made, but Ed Smitherman with the assistance of Bowen Jones, managed to get their two prisoners out of town into the woods, and safely lodged the two in jail at Clanton Monday morning.

Deputy Curlee remained in Maplesville and three more negroes were tried before Justice Glover on Monday, committed to jail without bail and carried to the Clanton jail.

Emma Sweatt, who is implicated in the murder, made her escape with her hand badly cut, supposedly by the razor used in the murder.

Mr. Houlditch was a section foreman for the Twin Tree Lumber Co., was a young man about 22 years, and was well liked and thought of in the community.

A Card of Thanks.

Editor Banner:—Please let me say my sincere thanks to all those who voted for me and I wish to add all we have to do now is to heartily support the nominees and all will be well in November.

Respectfully,
LEE HAYES.

EDWARD IS NO MORE

England's Monarch Succumbs After Brief Illness.

PRINCE OF WALES SUCCESSOR

Eventful Life Ends In Peace and All England Mourns—The Cause of the King's Death Was Pneumonia, Following Bronchitis.

King Edward VII, who returned to England from a vacation ten days ago in the best of health, died Friday night in the presence of his family, after an illness of less than a week, which was serious hardly more than three days.

The Prince of Wales succeeded to the crown immediately, according to the laws of the kingdom, without official ceremony. His first official act was to dispatch to the lord mayor the announcement of his father's death, in puruance of custom.

Pneumonia Caused Death.

Pneumonia, following bronchitis, is believed to have been the cause of death, but the doctors thus far have refused to make a statement. Some of the king's friends are convinced that worry over the critical political situation which confronted him, with sleepless nights, aggravated if it did not cause the fatal illness.

Capital in Sadness.

The intelligence that the end of King Edward's reign had come, was not a surprise at last. The people had been expecting it any hour since the evening's bulletin was posted at Buckingham palace and flashed throughout the kingdom. The capital received it without excitement but sadly, for the king, with his own people, was unquestionably one of the most popular rulers in the world. They regarded him as one of the strongest forces making for the stability of the peace of the empire.

His Last Utterance.

One of the last utterances attributed to King Edward was: "Well, it is all over, but I think I have done my duty." He seemed then to have reached a full realization that his death was appoaching.

The queen and others of the royal family and four doctors had been constantly in the sick room throughout the day. Several hours before his death, the king was was in a comatose condition, but he rallied slightly between 9 and 10 o'clock and appeared to recognize his family. Then he lapsed into unconsciousness, which ended in his passing.

Believe Cancer Caused Death.

In spite of all official denials, the belief that King Edward's death was hastened by cancer will never be dislodged from the minds of the people. The foundation for his fatal illness is traced to a taint in the royal family. The old throat affection of the king that caused the postponment of his coronation and many times caused alarm, is held directly responsible for the attack of pneumonia, which, it is given out, was the immediate cause of death.

New Ruler of England.

George V.

Born at Marlborough house, June 3, 1865.

Full name of Prince, George Frederick Ernest Albert, Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall, of York and of Rothesay, Count of Chester and Garrick and of Inverness, Baron of Renfrew and of Killarney.

Became crown prince through death of his elder brother, the Duke of Clarence, in 1892.

Married July 6, 1893, to Princess May, of Teck.

Has six children: Prince Edward Albert, heir apparent, now sixteen years old; Prince Albert, fifteen; Princess Victoria Alexandra, thirteen; Prince Henry, ten; Prince George Edward, eight; Prince John Charles, five.

Known as good seaman and navigator; spent fifteen years in active service.

Nickname: "The Sailor Prince."

Had Youthful Romance.

While King George, since he became Prince of Wales and the husband of Princess May of Teck, has been the ideal of the British father of a family, he had his youthful romance.

When he was a lieutenant in the navy and his ship was laid up at Malta three months for repairs, he met the beautiful daughter of a naval officer, said at the time to be Miss Seymour; fell in love with and married her. The marriage, although it was solemnized by a clergyman, was not legal in the light of an act of parliament regulating the marriages of those of royal blood. The British admiralty also took occasion to deny that there had been a marriage.

There were children born of this match—whether two or three, is not known outside of circles intimately connected with the royal family. Young George was very happy and very much in love with his wife.

But the Duke of Clarence, died a month before the date set for his marriage to the Princess May of Teck, and George became the crown prince. Immediately it was seen that he would have to contract a marriage with one of royal blood in order that there might be a direct heir to the throne of royal blood.

Queen Victoria took charge of the situation. She decreed that George, then duke of York, should marry the Princess May. The prince, deeply in love with his wife, rebelled. He wanted his marriage legalized by parliament. Queen Victoria would not hear of any compromise. They forced him to marry the Princess May.

The "Lady of Malta," as the commoner wife of the prince was called, was gently put aside. She was well provided for, and her children will always have their every want gratified—every wish but the natural wish that they may enjoy the companionship of their father.

'QUAKE KILLS 1,000.

Costa Rica Desolated; Thousands Maimed and Homeless.

For days Central America has been shaken by violent earthquake shocks. For the seventh time in its history Cartago, former capital of Costa Rica, lies in ruins.

Other cities have been destroyed. Careful estimates, based on the latest reports received here, give the following as the extent of the disaster:

Dead—1,000.
Injured—1,400.
Homeless—15,000.
Towns destroyed or partially wrecked—4.

Paraiso, a town eight miles to the east of Cartago, and Orosi, twenty miles to the southeast, are both reported to have met the fate of the larger city.

The volcanoes Turialba and Irasu, already partially or wholly in eruption, give signs of a severe outbreak. The entire population of the central and northern sections of Costa Rica is in terror. The railroad running from here to the north, with spurs to Cartago and San Jose, is tied up. It is believed that the line has been completely wrecked in places and that its reconstruction for a great portion of its length will prove necessary. All wires are down. The full extent of the disaster is beyond the grasp of startled Costa Rica.

One of the richest parts of the country lies desolated, the wreckage of its houses covering hundreds of dead, and aid is urgently needed. Though Cartago, according to the fullest reports available, bore the brunt of the shock, the earthquake affected a wide area, fully 200 miles in length and extending to Nicaragua. The towns along the San Juan river, running near the boundary between Costa Rica and Nicaragua, have all felt the shocks severely, according to dispatches from Greytown. Couriers arriving here brought news of damage done to San Carlos, Castillo, Viejo and Ochoa. Throughout the valley, the shocks have played havoc, and in at least one place the course of the river has been changed.

Many settlements in the hills about Cartgo are believed to have been destroyed, besides Paraiso, whose population is 2,000, and Orosi, with 2,200 population.

PRIEST ROUTS ROBBERS.

In Fight He Was Probably Fatally Stabbed In Back.

Hearing strange noises in the night, the priest in charge of the church at Alboraya, near Albacete, proceeded to investigate. He discovered four masked men busily packing all the gold and silver ornaments into sacks.

The men immediately rushed at the priest, but the latter, a powerful man, snatched up a large candlestick and defended himself gallantly. Two of the brigands were knocked senseless, but a third crept behind the priest and stabbed him in the back.

By this time people living near, aroused by the noise, were clamoring for admission, and two of the robbers fled, leaving their comrades behind. The priest is not expected to recover.

EXPLOSION IN MINE

Two Hundred Probably Killed In Alabama.

CORPSES CHOKE WORKINGS

By the Explosion of Gas, Palos Coal and Coke Company's Mine Near Birmingham Is Wrecked With Dire Results.

Birmingham, Ala.—Forty-five white men and between 130 and 145 negroes have been entombed in No. 3 coal mine at Palos, as the result of a terrific explosion.

Palos is 40 miles west of Birmingham and the mines are owned by the Palos Coal and Coke Company, of which the Brennan Brothers, of Birmingham, are the owners.

State Mine Inspector James Hillhouse thinks all of the men in the mine are dead.

The flames resulting from the explosion shot into the air from the slope for a distance of 200 feet and the shock was felt for miles around. Timbers from the slope were hurled several hundred feet from the mouth of the slope and rocks from the roof of the slope caved in and made access to the mouth very difficult.

James Gousby, a mail carrier, was killed 30 feet from the mouth of the slope, and his body was hurled 30 feet into the river. He was walking along the railroad track and was directly in front of the slope when the explosion occurred. It was judged from this that the force of the explosion was such that none of the men on the interior could possibly be alive.

It is thought that the explosion was caused by the accumulation of gas in some of the old abandoned entries which are barely visible.

UNIONS MAY UNITE.

Plan for Amalgamation of Farmers and American Federation.

St. Louis.—A plan for a political union of the American Federation of Labor and the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union of America, with its 3,000,000 members, is being worked out at a conference between labor union and farmers' union officials in this city, coincident with the farmers' rally now in progress.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, is behind the movement.

Gompers denies any intention of forming a new political party through an amalgamation of the Farmers' Union with the American Federation of Labor. His plan, he says, is to induce the farmers to be partisan in principle and not in party. He hopes, he says, to induce the agriculturists of the country to nominate and elect men favorable to the betterment of labor conditions regardless of political affiliation.

BOY BANDIT FOUND GUILTY.

Hoal Is Given Life Sentence For Killing Bank Cashier.

Thomas Jefferson Hoal, the noted boy bandit, was found guilty of murder at Gorydon, Ind., and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Hoal is a seventeen-year-old Louisville youth, who last November executed an amazing single-handed attack on the Merchants' National bank of New Albany, Ind., with the motive of robbery. He compelled a negro chauffeur to drive him to the bank at noon through crowded streets. In the bank he became excited, shot and killed Cashier J. Hangary Fawcett, wounded President J. K. Woodward and also the negro chauffeur. Without securing any money from the bank he dashed from the bank and attempted to cross the Ohio river in a skiff, being captured in mid stream by the police. His remarkable nerve greatly helped the police in saving him from threatened lynching.

Mental defectiveness was his defense.

MUCH DEPENDS ON PETTICOAT

Women's Costumes Make It Imperative That Garment Should Be a Perfect Fit.

The petticoats of this season, [illegible] is considered more important than fit, but that is not the case this year. On the fit of the petticoat depends largely the fit of the gown, so the petticoat must be right. There never has been a time in the history of the petticoat fashions when greater consideration has been given the fit and workmanship of the garments. The woman who is particular as to the correct details of dress demands that her undergarments fit perfectly in order to carry out the correct straight lines which are considered fashionable. With the [illegible] fit of the outer skirt it is absolutely necessary to have the underskirts fit with the same perfection, for the correct lines of the dresses are destroyed. The style of the garments is in practically all instances of secondary consideration, the simple tailored designs generally being selected. It is not an easy matter to introduce innovations in the designing of petticoats since, usually from one season to another, practically the same designs are used in, with variations in the arrangements of the tucks, plaitings, shirrings and strippings. Tailored designs which have been in pronounced favor for several seasons give every evidence of retaining popularity for some time to come. With the tailored suits and dresses the tailored petticoat is particularly suitable, so as far as the vogue for tailored designs in dress continues this style of petticoat is likely to be in demand.

DESIGN FOR PILLOW.

The clover leaf pillow cover may be made of any light weight washable material. Cut clover leaves from paper, baste in position, then outline with braid. Finish the edge of the cover with a three-inch ruffle of the material.

History of "La Grippe."

Grip was first discovered in England in 1173; since when there have been more than one hundred epidemics. It first appeared in the United States in 1627 and went all over the western hemisphere. The last epidemic started in Bokhara in May, 1889, and reached the United States in the middle of December. Its rate of spread is nearly as rapid as travel. Since 1889 there have been grip epidemics in the American cities every winter—that is there are many mild cases of grip, during deadly epidemics of grip, so there are many cases of severe colds in the head, or "grip," false grip, when true grip is about.—N. Y. Press.

How to Be Beautiful.

SOME NOTES ON NEEDLEWORK

With These in Mind, Many Tasks Will Be Found Easier of Accomplishment.

Japan floss is the finest embroidery silk made.

The covering of embroidery hoop rings should be renewed frequently.

Badly torn places in lace may frequently be mended with a little net and the result is exceptionally good.

A dainty gift for a school girl is a white satin ribon snood on which wee pink rosebuds are embroidered here and there.

A pair of tweezers is a handy accessory of the work basket and is a very useful article in pulling out little ends of baste thread.

The busy housewife who dreads darning day may not know that paraffin rubbed on the heels of stockings reduces friction and saves many a jagged hole.

Embroidery can be cleaned by rubbing the surface with a piece of bread a day old. Use a small piece with the crust still on it and then throw away as soon as soiled.

If you can work letters neither with a loop nor without it, compromise on a piece of fine oilcloth sewed under the letters. Baste outside the portion to be worked, otherwise there is danger of pulling the embroidery when the stitches are cut. It is easy with a little practice to do the lettering without sticking the needle point on the oilcloth.

To inset lace or insertion, first baste the material to be ornamented on stiff paper, then apply the lace to it and sew by hand or machine. To form yokes or cuffs of insertion, cut the shape in stiff paper, then baste on the insertion, making it lie flat, and sew on the machine. One edge of the lace must, of course, be lapped over the other. The machine sewing gives a better finish than hand sewing and is much easier.

Telegraph Poles from Russia.

There was a time when the needs of the British postoffice in the way of poles to support the overhead telegraphs of the United Kingdom were met solely from Norway. But to-day Norway's tallest pines are not forthcoming in sufficient numbers to meet the demands of the expanding service—demands averaging 50,000 poles per annum. Sweden was duly laid under contribution, and now Russia has become a valuable source of supply. It was in 1905 that this source was opened up by the present comptroller of stores, who visited Russia for the purpose. The poles come not only from the forests that feed the Baltic ports, but from those in the White sea hinterland.

TEACHING THE YOUNG WIVES

City Grocers, with an Eye to Their Own Interests, Show Them How to Arrange Icebox.

"Even grocers are taking a hand in the education of young housewives," said the pretty New York woman. "I did my first marketing last week. The grocer knew I was green. When I had finished buying he said:

"'Now, do you know how to arrange things in your icebox to the best advantage?'

"I said I was afraid I didn't. He called a young man from the rear of the store.

"'James,' he said, 'when you deliver this basket of things will you show the lady the most economical arrangement of her refrigerator?'

"Fifteen minutes later white-aproned James was turning my ice chest upside down. He made a place for everything and said it ought to be kept there, no matter how small the icebox. The meats, for example, should always come between the milk and butter and the fruit and salads. When he finished my refrigerator held about twice as much as I had been able to get into it. Another wondrous phase of the situation was that James refused a tip.

"'We make it point,' he said, 'of showing customers the proper arrangement of an icechest.'"

After The Grippe

"I am much pleased, to be able to write and thank you for what Cardui has done for me," writes Mrs. Sarah A. Gilliland, of Siler City, N. C. "Last February, I had the Grippe, which left me in bad shape. Before that, I had been bothered with female trouble, for ten years, and nothing seemed to cure it. "At last, I began to take Cardui. I have taken only three bottles, but it has done me more good than all the doctors or than any other medicine I ever took."

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

For the after-effects of any serious illness, like the grip, Cardui is the best tonic you can use. It builds strength, steadies the nerves, improves the appetite, regulates irregularities and helps bring back the natural glow of health. Cardui is your best friend, if you only knew it. Think of the thousands of ladies whom Cardui has helped! What could possibly prevent it from helping you? Remember you cannot get the benefit of the Cardui ingredients in any other medicine, for they are not for sale at any drug store except in the Cardui bottle. Try Cardui.

Had Good Reason for So Doing, But Landlady Received Something of a Shock.

"In spite of the fact that it's so common these days, it made me uneasy," said the woman who keeps lodgers. "The professional nurse who rooms at my house—the one with a great pile of light brown hair—was called out on an emergency case night before last. When I went up in the morning to do her room I found she had left her hair hanging by the mirror. I thought, of course, she was coming back, or would telephone for it, or send an A. D. T., or something. But the forenoon passed and no word came from the nurse. I kept going up to the room to look at that hair; it seemed to fascinate me; and then it got on my nerves. Don't know why, but I was obsessed that something had happened to the nurse. You know, they are such good lodgers—pay so well and out most of the time—that I take a special interest in them.

"So finally I thought to look in her call book and found that she had left her number. Then I telephoned her. I was a good deal relieved, and a little amused, too. You see, she had gone out on a contagious case, and she doesn't wear her best hair at such times—too much trouble to keep it disinfected, she says. But she was grateful to me for calling up. Wouldn't I please put it away in the top bureau drawer. She had not intended to leave it out."

Uses Animals Make of Their Tails.

Horses, cows and other creatures use their tails as fly flappers. Cats, squirrels and many more twist them around their necks for comforters. The rat has raised the use of the tail to a fine art, for by its means it guides the blind and steals jelly, oil and cream out of jars and bottles.

The macaco plays as merrily with its tail as a kitten does, and the marmoset while it sleeps uses its tail as a sort of blanket.

The raccoon catches crabs with its tail. Every one knows how the monkeys journey through pathless forests by swinging from tree to tree, while the fishes steer their way through the water by their tail fins.

The ant eater puts up its big bushy tail for an umbrella. The vanity of the peacock is fed by the beauty of its tail.—Dumb Animals.

Origin of the Pigtail.

The report that the Chinese department of state affairs contemplates issuing an order directing officials, soldiers and police to give up the queue and to wear their hair short recalls that the queue was introduced into China by the Manchu dynasty nearly three centuries ago. It is said to have been originally suggested to the Manchus by their sense of gratitude to the horse, that animal having played a great part in the Tartar conquests. In short, the "pigtail" was a method of establishing a relationship between human beings and horses.—Japan Mail.

Commander Julius A. Pratt Post No. 143 Dept. Ill., G. A. R.

Mr. Isaac Cook, Commander of above Post, Kewanee, Ill., writes: "For a long time I was bothered with backache and pains across my kidneys. About two months ago I started taking Foley Kidney Pills and soon saw they were doing just as claimed. I kept taking them and now I am free from backache, and the painful bladder misery is all gone. I like Foley Kidney Pills so well that I have told many of my friends and comrades about them and shall recommend them at every opportunity." Upchurch Drug Co.

SELF-FEEDER FOR THE BEES

A very simple device for feeding bees on syrup is shown herewith.

Take an ordinary fruit can, fill it full of syrup and over the top tie a thick rag with a string. Then invert the can in a small pan or dish. The syrup will seep out through the rag around the edges of the jar just fast enough for the bees to keep it cleaned up.

Producing Honey.

A colony of 40,000 bees will require three weeks to produce 50 or more pounds of surplus honey. In some sections of perpetual bloom hives have been known to give as much as 500 pounds of honey. One bee owner on the Pacific coast had 6,000 hives, which produced 200,000 pounds of honey yearly, worth $40,000.

Storing Celery.

If your celery is to be stored and held for late marketing it will keep better if not blanched too much in the field. Soil drawn up about the plants will help make the stalks straight and the plants compact, so they will store without necessary loss of space, but it is a mistake to try to complete blanching before storing.

Care of Cellar.

Everything keeping nicely in the cellar? An iron kettle filled with the hot coals from the kitchen stove and set on the floor of the cellar every night will keep it dry and pleasant but not too warm.

The Telephone.

The telephone on a farm cannot take the place of a hired man, but it helps wonderfully.

Sinking Spells Every Few Days

"At the time I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I was having sinking spells every few days. My hands and feet would get cold; I could scarcely breathe, and could feel myself gradually sinking away until I would be unconscious. Those about me could not tell there was life in me. After these spells I would be very weak and nervous, sleepless and without appetite; had neuralgia in my head and heart. After taking the remedy a short time all this disappeared and in a few weeks all the heart trouble was gone."

King Edward of England died rather suddenly last Friday and King George V reigns in his place. "The King is dead, long live the King."

Again another terrible explosion in the mines in the Birmingham district has caused the loss of over one hundred lives, bringing woe and destitution to many homes, and grief and sadness to the stricken families. There should be some means of averting these frightful calamities and it is devoutly to be hoped something may be done to avoid these fearful catastrophes in future.

The election returns are all in and show some rather queer results. Emmett O'Neal, anti amendist, is nominated for governor by a majority of about 15,000, while Walter D. Seed, amendist, secures the lieutenant-governorship by a majority of about 10 000 over his anti-amendist opponent, a peculior state of things to say the least of it. The convention next Tuesday at Montgomery is looked forward to with a great deal of interest, and may throw some new light upon the situation.

Attempted Burglary at Clanton.

Early on Sunday morning—about three o'clock,—two pistol shots aroused the attention of residents near the court house. Night marshal Wagoner, in making his rounds, discovered a man trying to effect an entrance through a rear window of Robinson's storehouse. He fired two shots at the burglar, who at once made off. Dogs were put on the trail, but nothing more was seen of the frustrated burglar.

Bruce Kennedy, right editor of the Montgomery Advertiser, has been appointed secretary of the Business Men's League of that city, an appointment he is thoroughly qualified to fill, and we congratulate him on his acceptance of the position and the League upon securing his valuable services. It is particularly a case of the right man in the right place.

Progress of Languages.

The progress of languages spoken by different nations is said to be as follows: English, which at the commencement of the last century was spoken by only 20,000,000 of people, is now spoken by 100,000,000. Russian is now spoken by 60,000,000, against 30,000,000 at the same period. In 1801 German was spoken by only 35,000,000 people; to-day over 70,000,000 talk in the same language that William the emperor does. Spanish is now used by 44,000,000 of people, against 30,000,000 in 1800; Italian by 32,000,000, instead of 18,000,000; Portuguese by 13,000,000 instead of 8,000,000. In the case of French the increase has been from 34,000,000 to 46,000,000, or 36 per cent.

First Flying Machine.

The first flying machine of which history preserves any record was the "dove of Archytas." Archytas, lived in Tarentum, Italy, and was a contemporary of Plato. The account of his flying dove comes to us from Aulus Gellius, who tells us that it was formed of wood and so contrived that by a certain mechanical art it had the power to fly, so nicely was it balanced and put in motion by hidden and inclosed air. Just what this means is, of course, to a large extent uncertain, but that the "dove" was some sort of machine that was capable of "flying" is unquestioned and beyond doubt it is the earliest record of such machine that we have.

Petit Jury No. 3—Ed D. Vanderstice, Sampson Driver, Ben F. Gardner, John Williamson, Geo. P. Thompson, Hermie F. Children, Reuben Price, Geo. W. Mullins.

The civil docket was not of a very exciting nature, most of the cases were continued, none of any particular interest to the public and court adjourned at dinner time Wednesday until Thursday morning.

The trial of Mrs. Hattie Pope for murder in the first degree is set for next Monday, as is also that of Joe Wilson on a similar charge—both are set for Monday.

Gentlemen of Journalism, The Ledger has been surmising that many of you are rather pleased with the recent campaign, whether you liked the results, or not. It was a notable one, because it was the first one in which the papers required the candidates to pay for their advertising. Even then the papers gave away more advertising than they sold.

Candidates do not expect orators to go out and make speeches for them without pay, or without expense money. Many did expect the newspapers to make a campaign for them. There is no more reason why a newspaper should work for a man without pay than a railroad or a dray driver. No more reason why a newspaper should get a man an office than a farmer should make a crop for that same man and give it to him.

We do work for presidential candidates free of cost, but we will quit that in time. Either a candidate or his friends or those interested in what he represents should pay for the publicity that is intended to inform the people as to the merits of a campaign.

We newspaper people have spoiled candidates, and done a great wrong to our business in giving away so much advertising space. Moral issues call for our support naturally, but a mere scramble for a set of offices is by no means a moral issue. We belong to one or the other of the great parties and we do our duty when we vote and give editorial support to the nominees of that party. Helping a man to win a nomination is not a party duty, except at times.

We have seen the day come in Alabama when the people would not go out to hear speakers and when to reach the people the newspapers have to be used. That means a better day for the newspapers and The Ledger congratulates the press of the state on the way it managed the campaign this year. It set the pace.

Delinquent Children in France.

The government of France sends delinquent children to a farmer's family, pays a stated sum a week for board and lodging and pays for clothes and the doctor. The child must be sent to a public school. The cost of all this is far less than keeping up institutes, and, furthermore, these French children of the venue of crime and misfortune usually stay on the soil and become healthy, expert farmers and good, saving citizens. How to manage the delinquent city kid is getting to be one of the most serious question of white civilization.

OBITUARY.

On Saturday morning, May 7th, the death angel visited the home of our brother. J. H. Hull and took away his beloved coming, Mrs. Emma Hull. She leaves a husband, seven children and a number of friends and relatives to grieve her loss. She was a member of the Baptist church at New Prospect. She had been a member for thirteen years and all this time she seemed to be trying to live a devoted life in trying to bring her children up in a way that would be pleasing in the sight of God. She was loved by all who knew her. She was buried at New Prospect cemetery Sunday morning at 11 o'clock and services were conducted by Bro. Miller. Now I will say to the companion and dear little children,

Be still, sad hearts, cease pining.
For beyond the clouds the sun is shining.

I wish to assure one and all of my sincere appreciation of their support and to ask for a continuance of their good will.

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space in your kind old paper to say a few words. The health of this place is very good at the present. The farmers are getting behind with their work, on account of the snow on Monday, April, 25. Some of the farmers around here had some cotton up and chopped out and I guess it is chopped up very good by now.

The ice cream supper was enjoyed by all present Saturday night last. Well, I see the old coon has about done scratching now and I guess I had better ring off for this time with best wishes to the dear old Banner and its many readers.

RAMBLING BOY.

Beat Seven.

Editor Banner:—Please allow me room in your paper to say a few words in favor of our community.

Health of this section is not good in some respects.

We are enjoying pretty weather now, after looking sad over the past. Tomatoes, beans, cucumbers, watermelons, corn and some cotton was killed, but we are thankful we are left to grumble.

Mrs. Martha McAfee has been very sick, but we are proud to see her sitting up again.

Mrs. Jane Merchant has been sick a few days, but is somewhat better.

Uncle Donald Lawrence has been very sick but is better now.

Mr. Grover Merchant has the finest corn we have seen in this part.

Our Sunday school was very good Sunday, although several were absent on account of the singing at Rehaboth Church. The largest crowd that has been seen in many days was at the singing, which was fine. AUNT DINAH.

Editor Banner:—Just a few words about our society at this place. The society met at the home of Miss Minnie Moore last Satureay.

It was the most successful meeting since we oaganized.

We were glad to have Rev. C. H. Rogers with us. He made a fine talk, which we enjoyed so much.

Miss Della Williams also had a fine talk, on the good of a Sunday school in the literary school.

And a most interesting debate. Resolved that the farmer is the most indepentent of all people.

Those that discussed the subject were, affirmative. Miss Minnie Moore and Miss Hilda Mae Johnson, Negative, Miss Agnes Foster and Miss Pearl Wood. After the debate the question was submitted to the judges for the decision. It was decided that both sides had done excellent work and both sides had won or both failed and all decided that both had won.

Mrs. Irwin had a fine essay on education.

The society closed deciding to meet the fourth Saturday afternoon at the home of Miss Della Williams.

We invite all are interested to visit us.

Why don't more of the readers write to the Banner and make it more interesting? Something that will inspire the minds of the young girls and boys.

Help to make them better men and women, which we so much need. Wishing the Banner much success, I am,

Latest Evening Gowns.

Veiled effects are much the vogue in evening gowns, and though at first the idea may seem a particularly extravagant one, yet, on the other hand the lovely veiled gown may often provide the opportunity for using up as a foundation, one's last year's silk or satin party gown. Perhaps the prettiest of these gowns this year are trimmed with artificial flowers, either in garlands or arranged here and there in rather formal-looking little bouquets.

Chink's Burglar Protector.

"Never hear of a burglar breaking into a Chinese laundry, do you?" inquired the gentleman with a Sing Sing record. "I should think not. The laundry chinks always have money in the house, but a crook has a lot of respect for hot irons. I'd rather be shot with a pistol, chawed by a bulldog and batted with baleeticks than be a target for a hot iron. It is the Chinaman's handiest weapon and his aim is deadly. A cold iron is bad enough, but a hot one is fierce. It not only stuns, it burns and burns deep. Most Chinks know that crooks are afraid of their hot irons, and I have known wise old heathens who had lots of dough in the house to keep an iron on the fire all night in case anything should turn up."

What the Farmer Works For.

"Hello, Mr. Workingman, what are you doing?" "Digging potatoes." "What are you going to do with them?" "I sort them into four piles." "What for?" "The big pile of fine potatoes you see over there I give to the landlord as rent for his permission to allow me to live on earth; next to the biggest pile I give to the mortgagees as interest for the use of the implements to work with; the third pile I give in taxes for the privilege of living in the country." "And that pile of little ones, do you eat them?" "No, I feed them to the hogs to fatten them, and then give the hogs to the railroads for hauling the potatoes to the owners. This is a great country, though."—Southern Mercury.

Stays Pain in the Bladder, Kidneys and Back.

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye for ever to the scalding, dribbling, straining, or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back of the head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids or ankles; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3 50 just for filling this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this:

Dr. A. E. Robinson, K 1141 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it, this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

This Institute, composed of a group of regularly graduated physicians and surgeons, licensed, legally chartered and incorporated under the laws of the State of Ohio, sends at its own expense these eminent medical specialists in order to introduce the newest methods and discoveries in medicine and surgery, such as the system of treatment under X ray, Violet ray, Finsen ray, Hydrotherapy, Etc., to give to those who call on the above date, consultation, examination, advice and all medicines required to complete a cure, absolutely free. These specialists will diagnose your case and give you the benefit of their skill and medical knowledge.

There is in this case no experimenting or guess work at your expense. You will be told whether you can be cured or not. If your case is curable they will put you under treatment immediately; if incurable they will give you such advice as may prolong your life. Their treatment always gives quick relief, and ultimately positively cures. Being prepared to cope with each individual case the human system is thoroughly cleansed of the disease in a natural and direct manner, and improvement is noticed at once; even the worst cases are treated without any inconvenience to the patient or the pursuing of his or her daily vocation.

If you are improving under your family physician, do not come and take up their valuable time, as they absolutely refuse to treat any one who is under the care of the local physicians. They wish besides to give each patient plenty of time and their undivided attention, but can not listen to long stories not pertaining to your trouble. They have discarded the old methods and remedies used for ages by the medical world, and which it would be folly to depend upon any longer, for they are not known to cure, as thousands die, depending on them for relief. The following list of diseases only are taken under treatment, to-wit: Diseases of the Nervous System, Heart, Stomach, Lungs, Kidneys, Catarrh, (purulent or dry), Consumption, Epilepsy, Deafness, Diseases of Women, Tumors, Pseudo Cancers, Piles, of a Chronic Nature only. They treat Deafness by an entirely new method, and hearing in many cases is restored at once. Catarrh in all its varied forms, like other diseases if once taken under treatment, is cured permanently to remain so and to never return. It matters not whom you have seen, or with whom treated, do not fail to call, as a visit will cost you nothing, and may restore you to health, or even save or prolong your life, as thousands of persons will testify by unassailable testimonials in all parts of the country. If you suspect Kidney Trouble, bring a two ounce bottle of your Urine for chemical and microscopical analysis.

REMEMBER:—The free offer is during this visit only, and will not be repeated. Persons commencing treatment upon their future visits will be required to pay, but not one cent will be asked from those commencing treatment during this visit for any medicine necessary to effect a cure, irrespective of your position in life, or the number of those who come on above date. Whensoever, or by whom wanted, a positive guarantee to cure will be given under their system of treatment. Those having long standing and complicated disease, who have failed to get well and become discouraged, are particularly invited to call.

NOTICE: — Married ladies without their HUSBANDS, and minors without their FATHERS, will positively not be admitted to consultation unless accompanied by one of their local physicians.

WITH DINNER DANCE

THE DEBUTANTE IS INTRODUCED INTO SOCIETY.

Smart Set Has Welcomed the Idea, Which Is Something of an Innovation—Ideas for Decoration of the House.

An afternoon reception is the usual medium for introducing the debutante as it is the most inclusive and least expensive method of presenting a girl to all the friends of her family.

White is usually chosen for the coming out frock, but it is quite as correct to select a delicate color and, as a matter of fact, pink or pale blue, green or maize yellow is often substituted. There are girls who do not look well in white, and certainly it is a mistake for them to choose it for their first formal appearance in society. The frock shown is in very pale rose pink chiffon taffeta, heavily weighted at the bottom so that it hangs in straight folds. Over this is draped silk mousseline to match, which runs up over either shoulder and crosses at the waist. Tiny pink rosebuds are arranged about the neck and in a panel that slopes up in a point in the front. A band of fancy French net lace is laid between and under the flowers, the mousseline drapery being caught to the skirt at the back with a loose cluster of the roses. The sleeves are entirely of silk mousseline and tulle, with roses tacked here and there.

The girls who are to receive with the debutante may wear any light theater or house gown. Cloth in white or in such colors as light blue or pink is a proper selection, provided it is not made on too heavy and severe a style.

Simplicity distinguishes the most effective home decorations for entertaining, the flowers that are always sent to a debutante being usually sufficient of themselves without anything else. They are arranged in vases and jars and the bunched ones are laid on the mantel shelves, the piano, book cases or whatever offers an effective resting place. A large bowl filled with roses should occupy the center of the dining room table, or a simple decoration can be arranged by a florist, and, with the silver and china, candles, bonbons, etc., nothing else will be needed.

The smart bouquet of the season is a return to the fashion of our grandmothers—a rigid little bunch with roses arranged stiffly in rows, either all one color or alternating dark and light tones, which makes it even quainter. The lace frill is either of paper or silk tissue, and is sometimes seen in real lace. Streamers of ribbon fall from it to the hem of the gown. This revival is very fetching if carried with a gown adapted from the modes of the same period.

Though the reception is the most general method of introduction, it is somewhat smarter to bring out the girl by means of a more exclusive and individual entertainment. This is sufficient in itself but is often given some weeks later in addition to the reception. A dance is the most pleasurable form for both young girls and men, as it is peculiarly their own function, only a sprinkling of older people being asked, though from twenty to thirty young married couples are always sought for. Dances are given at public ballrooms or in one's own house if there is space to do so. Even owners of large houses, however, prefer to give large entertainments in public ballrooms, as it eliminates so much confusion and upsetting of the domestic regime. Dinner dances in a series of three or four small ones or one large one, or a theater party, with supper and informal dancing afterwards, are other forms of introducing girls.—Vogue.

Of Dotted Foulard.

This smart gown of dark blue foulard shows a clever adaption of the Russian model. It is made with a tunic of dark and trimmed with a piping of dark blue satin. The yoke and cuffs are of white valenciennes.

SOLVING A MYSTERY

Engineers Working Upon Problem of Paris to Madrid Line.

Efforts Being Made to Overcome Distorting Effects of Long Lines by What Is Called "Loading" to Facilitate Speech.

London.—Telephone engineers all over the world are endeavoring to solve the problem of long distance work, and it may be possible soon to speak from London to Madrid via Paris.

The French postal administration has forwarded to Madrid for signature a preliminary agreement on the question of a Paris-Madrid telephone line. When the agreement is signed the laying of the telephone wires will be commenced. The line from London to Madrid via Paris would be about 1,000 miles long. The British post office regard 700 miles as the limit for ordinary working, but in some recent tests telephone conversations were held between Liverpool and Marseilles, a distance of just over 1,000 miles.

There are two main difficulties in the way of long distance telephony. The first is that the greater the distance the weaker will be the sounds heard in the telephone; the second is that an electrical property of all telephone lines known as "capacity" bends the waves transmitted through the wires out of shape and distorts the sounds. The 20 miles of submarine telephone cable between Sangatte and St. Margaret's Bay on the London-Paris line is as great a drawback as two or three hundred miles of overhead line, and it is this that demands caution in talking or speaking from London to great distances abroad.

Telephone engineers are trying to overcome the distorting effects of long lines by what is called "loading." At short intervals along the line small coils of wire are placed across the two telephone lines, and these, if spaced at distances properly in accord with the now historical calculations of Pupin, overcome the effects and render speech possible over much greater distances.

As in wet weather the distortion of the speech waves is hardly suitable for overhead wires; it has, nevertheless, been tried and is stated to increase the limit of speaking about three times. The longest distance over which speaking is possible is stated to be between Boston and Omaha, a distance of about 1,600 miles.

BOY OUT OF WINDOW ASLEEP

Pennsylvania Lad Makes Long Leap While in His Dreams—Receives Severe Injuries.

Chester, Pa.—To fall from a second story window, sprain an ankle and sustain severe lacerations on the face and body, and still remain asleep was the experience of ten-year-old John Dougherty, son of William Dougherty, a prominent resident of Crum Lynne.

Mrs. Dougherty was awakened by a strange noise at one of the upstairs windows and before she could reach the place she heard a thud in the yard below, and then everything was still.

Rushing down stairs, Mrs. Dougherty found her son standing in an alley and repeating the words, "Well, well."

Mrs. Dougherty picked up the little fellow and carried him into the house, when she discovered that he was still asleep.

When awakened John said he did not remember falling, but that he had dreamed some one was chasing him. To get out of the room it was necessary for him to unlock the shutters after raising the window.

It was at least an hour before he felt any pain from his injuries, which, while they are severe, are not considered dangerous.

LAY 10,654,109 DOZEN EGGS

Hens in New State of Oklahoma Cackle Many Times During the Year Just Passed.

Guthrie, Okla.—The hen has been busy in Oklahoma, acording to the second annual report of the state department of labor by Commissioner Charles Daugherty.

During the time considered in his report the hens of the new state cackled at least 10,654,109 dozen times. Mr. Daugherty says he knows positively of that many dozen eggs which were listed last year as surplus product. The egg buyers paid more than $2,000,000 to the Oklahoma farm wife for these eggs.

During the fiscal year included in the report, Oklahoma produced more than 14,000,000 pounds of live poultry, valued at $1,450,820.50, and of dressed poultry 1,970,452 pounds, valued at $240,305.50. Feathers totaled 12,014 pounds valued at a trifle over $7,000.

The total value of the farm yard products was $3,622,129.02.

Co-Eds Will Decree Etiquette.

Columbia, Mo.—Twenty women students of the University of Missouri have been selected by Miss Eva Johnson, woman's adviser of the university, to formulate rules of etiquette for the students.

Some questions to be decided are:

Is it proper to make trysts in the library?

Is it proper to play cards or dance every evening after supper at a boarding house?

Is it proper to stroll after dark?

HOW TO LIFT A WAGON BED

Illustration Showing How Body Can Be Raised, and Can Be Made by Any Handy Farmer.

An apparatus for lifting a wagon body is a simple contrivance and may be made by a farmer handy with tools. A A A (Fig. 1) are joists of an ordinary wagon shed upon which is placed a wooden roller B. This is four inches in diameter. D is a strong rope which winds around the roller and is fastened at its lower end to the cross piece E. Through each end of the cross piece passes a half-inch round bar F, with a bar on top of E. The lower ends of these bars end with square bends of three inches, which hook under the wagon bed and when turned half around will slip off and may be hoisted up and put out of the way. The handles C are four feet long and are mortised into the roller. A man or boy standing on the ground can turn the handles with ease and lift the bed in half the time it would require four men without this apparatus.

Fig. 2 shows a jack for a wagon bed and a platform or frame to receive the bed by driving four stout stakes into the ground, as high as the top of the standards and nailing cross pieces to them. The lifter consists of a stout piece of scantling or timber, which will reach two feet above the wagon bed, the top rounded, and a pin driven into it, which passes through a slot in the lever. Two chains with hooks are fastened at the short end of the lever and a rope or chain at the other end. The arm should be three feet and the lever end nine feet. The wagon is driven close against the side of the platform. The lifter should be placed as shown in the illustration, on a line midway between the wagon and the platform. The hooks on the ends of the chains are then caught under the bed, or on the rod which passes through the rear end of the bed, and by pulling on the rope or chain the bed is easily lifted out and swung around on the platform. The front end may be lifted over. The jack can be used to return the bed to the wagon. The jack may be moved from place to place and is serviceable for lifting other heavy articles.

Best Stomach Remedy Free

It is an old saying that if the stomach is sound the whole body is safe, because so much depends upon the proper working of the stomach. Many persons find themselves with a disorder of the stomach which produces dyspepsia or a peculiar state of biliousness.

If you suffer from both stomach trouble and constipation you are on the way to a very serious disease. From just such conditions come appendicitis, rheumatism, skin diseases and similar disorders, because the waste matter that should have been dispelled from the system through the bowels has found its way into the blood and vitiated it. What is needed at this point is not simply a violent cathartic tablet or salt, which usually does more harm than good, but a gentle laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which people have been using for these ailments for nearly a quarter of a century. It cured J. C. Lanham, of Warrensburg, Mo., of stomach trouble of long standing, also William Voll, of 923 Ellison St., Louisville, Ky., who had the trouble for fifteen years.

However, if you have stomach trouble you want to know from personal experience what Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will do for you. If so, send your name to the doctor and a free trial bottle will be sent you. You are urged to send for the free bottle, as the results from it will be the best recommendation of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Then you will do as over two million people did last year—go to your druggist and buy a regular bottle at 50 cents or $1, according to the size you prefer. We could mention hundreds and hundreds of families who are never without it. You can never tell when some member of the family will need a laxative, and then no time should be lost taking Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 560 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

PAY HIGH PRICES FOR PIPES

Smokers Known to Expend Large Amounts on Adornments for Their Favorites.

Tennyson delighted in an Irish clay and birdseye tobacco, while Bismarck, who reduced something like 2,000 cigars to ashes every year, was greatly devoted to his old brier pipe, the fumes of which were, to quote one authority, "comparable only to a mixture of sewer and gasworks."

The kaiser always smokes a pipe in private, and, like the prince of Wales, favors the small brier pipe.

On the other hand, there are many middle-class men to-day who smoke pipes costing many dollars. For the most part they are presentation pipes of carved meerschaum, or o fthe brier type with gold mountings and the choicest amber mouthpieces. Of course, you can make a pipe as expensive as you please. You can mount it with diamonds, rubies and emeralds, and run up the value to an enormous extent, or you could have an oriental hookah at anything from $500 to $2,500.

The most costly pipes of to-day are those used by the Dutch and the Germans. They are of formidable dimensions, some holding as much as a pound of tobacco. These pipes are mostly of the meerschaum variety, and some are carved so elaborately as to command $1,000 each.—Stray Stories.

What Others Say About It.

Many of the best people in Tennessee and adjoining states recommend St. Joseph's Liver Regulator as being a splendid laxative and liver medicine. Its occasional use will keep the system in good condition, thus assisting nature to establish good health. It will remove the pile and effete matter from the system, and as a rule, Nature "will do the rest," Try it. It is well endorsed. It is made in both liquid and powders. Druggists and dealers sell it, liquid, 50 cents a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25 cents a box. Upchurch Drug co.

Growing Hatred To Jesus

Sunday School Lesson for May 15, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 12:22-32, 38-42. Memory verse, 41.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad."—Mark 12:30.

TIME.—Probably in the autumn of A. D. 28.

PLACE.—Some where in Galilee; very likely in Capernaum.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

A Wicked Charge Against Jesus.—Vs. 22-24. "What gave rise to this charge against Jesus?" The healing of "one possessed with a devil, blind, and dumb." In the similar event recorded in Matt. 9:32-34 the demoniac was dumb only. This case, though described so briefly, was "a striking miracle; in truth, three miracles in one."—Rev. David Smith.

Dumb Devils.—Many, even of Christians, are troubled with dumb devils without realizing it. Our speech is a Godlike faculty, given us to be used for God, in prayer to him—private prayer, family prayer, public prayer—in telling others about his goodness, in kindly praise of what is worthy and in bold condemnation of all that is evil.

What was the result of the miracle? As always in such cases, it was a savor of death to death and of life to life. On the one hand, "all the people" (the common folks that saw it done, or afterward saw the happy man seeing or heard him speaking) "were amazed," as well they might be, "and said, is not this the son of David?"

But, on the other hand, the Pharisees had an unfavorable interpretation. In their hatred of Christ they had come all the way from Jerusalem (Mark) to get material for some charge against him. "He hath Beelzebub," they asserted shamelessly (Mark).

Why did the Pharisees make this abominable charge? They were jealous of Christ, and envious of his power over human hearts and lives.

The Crushing Reply—Vs. 25-30. "The way in which Jesus dealt with these men is among one of the most wonderful features of the Gospel. It sheds light upon many things, but it sheds a peculiar light upon him, and upon the spirit that was in him."—Horton.

What was Christ's first argument? The argument of the divided house. "Every kingdom," said Christ, "divided against itself" in civil war "is brought to desolation;" "and every city or house (household) divided against itself" by quarreling factions and family strife, "shall not stand."

What was Christ's second argument? The argumentum ad hominem. "If I by Beelzebub cast out devils," urged Christ, "by whom do your children," the Jewish exorcists, "cast them out?"

What is Christ's third argument? The argument of the castle, or palace. "Now see," Christ asks, "could I enter the castle unless I were stronger than Satan? And how could I regain the spoil that Satan has stolen, the rich spoil of health and character and happiness, without proving myself the enemy of Satan?"

What was Christ's fourth argument? The argument of the two sides: "He that is not with me is against me."

An Awful Warning—Vs. 31-37. The foregoing was a terrible warning, but Christ did not deem it severe enough.

What was Christ's warning for such men? That there is an unpardonable sin; blasphemy against the Holy Ghost.

What, then, is this blasphemy against the spirit? "It is no sudden, angry blasphemy. Whoever fears that he has committed it and prays for pardon is worlds away from it."—W. Robertson Nicoll, LL. D.

How did Christ himself illustrate these truths? By three condensed parables (vs. 33-37). The parable of the tree and its fruit; the parable of the viper, and the parable of the treasure.

Christ's Sufficient Attestation.—Vs. 38-45. The scribes and Pharisees answered Christ's declaration that he was of God and they, in their wicked opposition, from the devil, by demanding a sign, that is, some miracle that would confirm these tremendous claims.

Why was this, as Christ called it, a wicked demand? Because Christ had given them signs in great plenty.

What was the sign of the prophet Jonas that Christ offered? Christ's resurrection. As Jonas was three days and three nights in the body of the sea monster (for the word translated "whale" means "sea monster" in general) so Christ would "be three days and three nights" in the grave and then would rise from the dead.

Why was this a sufficient sign? It was the greatest miracle possible—greater than to raise others from the grave. It was the crowning evidence that our Lord was the divine fountain of life.

How Men Reject Christ.—They do not reject him immediately and consciously. They draw away from him by degrees and without realizing what is happening in their lives. Like the Pharisees, they gradually form the habit of pride and selfishness. Like Judas, they come insensibly to love money more than God and right. Like Pilate, they grow away from the love of truth and become devotees of popularity and power. Like Herod, they lose their purity and manliness day by day, and sink inch by inch into the pit of sensuality. Like the demoniac of Christ's parable, they simply fail to fill their lives full of what is noble and pure.

LIVE STOCK

LIVE STOCK NOTES.

Good care of the ewe may save the lamb.

Moldy corn is dangerous feed for the horses.

Heavy horses are not calculated for hard driving.

Never feed corn alone to hogs. It is false economy.

Carelessness in handling pigs is a bad habit to acquire.

Sheep are excellent farm cleaners, weed killers and fertilizers.

Does the barn smell stuffy these mornings? Fix that ventilator.

Even on cold days hogs should have plenty of good fresh air.

The idea that anything is good enough for a pig is a mistaken one.

Blanket your horses during the sleet storms as well as when it is extremely cold.

On bright, warm days open up the stable doors and let the blessed sunshine in.

Some cornstalks may be fed to the porkers every day. They are sweet and do the hogs good.

Every sheep owner should keep a pure bred ram, but every man is not qualified to keep pure bred stock.

Everything possible should be done to bring the ewes to a vigorous flesh forming condition at the mating period.

The man who desires large profits from his flock should provide it with the best that good management will produce.

The man who sells his calves for veal and his young steer for other people to breed is robbing his own family.

The man who keeps cattle, hogs and sheep and owns a manure spreader will never be in fear of the fertilizer trust.

If your best brown mare is worth $200 to the man over in the next township you may be sure she is worth more than that to you—keep her.

apart. Get a small log and mortise an end in each post, having one end six inches, the other 12 inches from ground. This will fit both pigs and hogs. Cover posts and log with old grain sacks and tack them on securely. Mix common machine oil and kerosene in equal parts and keep bags well saturated. The hogs will do the rest.

Care of Animals.

Much is said about the health of hogs, cows, and other domestic animals, and there is some ground for the agitation. All will admit that our domestic animals are not as robust and free from disease as they should be, yet we believe that conditions are such that our animals might be as healthy as they ever were in the history of farming.

Woman's Long and Useful Life.

Mrs. Dinah E. Sprague, who celebrated her one-hundredth birthday last May, is the oldest member of the Woman's Relief corps. Though born in New York, Mrs. Sprague was among the early settlers of Cleveland. During the civil war a large number of soldiers camped on the heights above Cleveland, and Mrs. Sprague was untiring in her efforts to better the condition of the sick and wounded in this camp. At the age of ninety Mrs. Sprague claimed her right to the ballot by voting for university trustee.

njuriousness of Sugar.

For three reasons, according to Dr. Patchen, is sugar injurious. First, because it is used very often to render palatable articles which by reason of age and decay have become unfit for proper nourishment. Second, because it interferes with the digestion and assimilation of other kinds of food. Third, because of its seductive palatability it causes food to be eaten after the physiological limit of supply and demand has been reached.

A Taste for Good Books.

If I were to pray for a taste which should stand me in stead under every variety of circumstances, and be a source of happiness and cheerfulness to me through life and a shield against its ills, however things might go amiss and the world frown upon me, it would be a taste for reading. I speak of it, of course, only as a worldly advantage, and not in the slightest degree as superseding or derogating from the higher office and surer and stronger panoply of religious principles—but as a taste, an instrument, and a mode of pleasurable gratification. Give a man this taste, and the means of gratifying it, and you can hardly fail of making a happy man, unless, indeed, you put into his hands a most perverse selection of books.—Sir John Herschel.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

On Sunday night some of our worthy citizens let their indignation get the better of their Christian feelings and there was some talk of taking summary vengeance upon the negroes in jail at Clanton, charged with the murder of poor Cleve Houlditch. A small crowd got together and some threatening talk was made, but cooler heads dissuaded them from making any attempt to frustrate the law, and after awhile they dispersed. But the electric light plant kept the town illuminated all night—in case of accidents.

A grateful rain was falling on Tuesday afternoon, which was welcomed by everyone, and it put the water wagon out of business for awhile. The weather has been extraordinarily cool for this time of year and farmers say it has played the mischief with cotton, that will be hard to overcome. Halley's comet, or something else, is playing the deuce with the weather.

After the Democratic convention is over and the platform announced we can look for a lull in politics for a little while at least. About 1500 delegates to the convention are reported to be in Montgomery and as among a multitude of counselers there is wisdom we may hope for a brilliant policy to be issued.

Now that the comet is obliging enough to give an evening exhibition we can all become star-gazers and rubber-necking will be all the fashion. Comets of the size of this one are few and far between and it is certainly an opportunity not many of us will live again to view this wonder of the heavens.

Henry Kennedy, one of the negroes charged with the murder of Cleve Houlditch, now in the Clanton jail has developed a case of small pox and is removed to the pest house under gaurd. Dr. Hopkins says the negro is undoubtedly suffering from small pox. The charge against this negro is assault with intent to murder.

In the Maplesville murder case Sam Smith, Wiley Young, Alice Shepard, Wm. McCarey are under indictment for murder in the first degree, the trial is set and 50 extra men of jurors summoned for Friday 20th May.

Col. Robt. H. Knox and Thomas A Curry were appointed by the court to defend the four prisoners

On Wednesday evening about 5 o'clock the jurors were discharged and court adjourned until Thursday morning at 8:30 o'clock.

It appears to me that the convention adopted the right policy—local option. If Chilton county prefers prohibition, why everyone in favor is satisfied, and the express company gets the benefit. If other counties prefer the licensing of the sale of liquor, why, then they are satisfied, and when both sides of the question are satisfied everything is lovely.

We could ask for a better plank than this.

We favor temperance and sobriety as promotive of good citizenship and good governmentr but we do not favor legislative attempts to enforce prohibition of the manufacture, sale or other disposition of intoxicants against the expressed wishes of the communities affected, and we reaffirm our adherence to the principle of local option in the platform of the party adopted in 1906, believing that a departure from the time honored Democratic doctrine of local self-government, and was in furtherance of the cause of prohibition.

Editor Banner:—Allow us through the medium of your paper to extend to the people of Maplesville and surrounding community our heartfelt thanks for their kindness to us in our late bereavement. Jemison, May 16, 1910

Editor Banner:—Please allow me space in your paper to thank the democrats of Chilton county for their loyal support in the primary of May 2nd. I am more than pleased with the results and will promise to do all I can for the success of the ticket in November. With best wishes to all. I am in the fight to win. G. D. RETHERFORD.

In Memory of Cleve Houlditch.

As we read the notice in the paper of his sad tragic death our hearts went out in sympathy for his fond and loving parents, brothers, sister and many friends who mourn his loss. But we trust our loss is his gain; he was a noble, ambitious young man and gained the respect and love from all who knew home.

"Oft at night when you are sleeping mama:
I will hover around your head.
Pleasant dreams of me shall haunt you,
Weep not, mama, I am not dead.

Weep not, papa, though you have laid me
In the cold and silent grave,
I will be first to greet you,
Near the Lamb who died to save."

Fond remembrance of Jemison.

Editor Banner:—Dear sir, as I have seen a short piece in the Banner last week about the ball game at Thorsby between Waddy and Thorsby, I will say to Mr. Bice that I think Dorminy had the Thorsby bunch fanning the air some when it is known by everybody that was there that none of the Thorsby players did not get a single hit. Jemison's players got three hits and the Mulberry players got one and Volley Mims one. That was the amount of hits off Dorminy. Thorby got their scores off Waddy's errors and not off Thorsby. Bulling Dorminy fanned more men than Mims did. If Dorminy could have had the support that Mims had Thorsby would have made twenty-six and that would have been the two home runs that Langston got. Now Groner, if you have got it up in your mind that Waddy can't beat you playing ball, leave Jemison and Mulberry out and bring your Thorsby team to our diamond and we will convince you.

Respectfully,
C. A. RETHERFORD.

Vida.

Editor Banner:—Please allow us a small space in the dear Banner, for the first time. Well, Vida is getting better, they are building the mill back here, and everybody enjoying it.

Health of this place is fine at present, but breaking arms are very common here.

Miss Lila Hester visited Speer last week.

Mrs. Chambers and Miss Ella Curtin made a flying trip to Prattville last Thursday.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely under the management of Mr Clyatt.

Mr. Clyde Sanders got his arm badly cut, but we think he likes the swing well.

Mr F. J. Curtin visited home Sunday from Selma; guess he will move soon.

Miss Nettie Chambers visited Vida Saturday.

Miss Ruby Williams visited Miss Lila Hester last Sunday.

The singing at Mr. and Mrs. Hester's was fine, and thoroughly enjoyed by all present.

The ice cream supper at Mr. and Mrs. Cooper's was enjoyed by many.

Thorsby

The strawberry season has been short and strenuous. About 4,000 crates having been shipped within the past four weeks.

Most of the growers have about cleaned up their crop, although some fields on the lower lands will continue bearing for several days more. The season has been by far the shortest in the history of the industry here, and yet the output will be double that of any former season, and the prices obtained have been for the most part very satisfactory, while the women and children of the district who have done most of the picking are feeling like heirs to an estate with something like $1200 divided among them for their work, and nearly all our farmers are wearing smiles, and increasing their fields as far as they feel able to take care of them.

S. S. CONVENTION NO. 3

The next Sunday School Convention of District No. 3 will be held at Thorsby on 5th Sunday in May; the program will be published next week.

IMPOSING FUNERAL

King Edward to Be Buried With Elaborate Ceremonies.

30,000 SOLDIERS TAKE PART

It Is Estimated That Seven Hundred People Will Pass Through Westminster Hall to Look on the Coffin of the Dead Ruler.

The whole court and all of London are absorbed in the preparations for the funeral of King Edward which will be the most imposing ceremonial Great Britain's capital has ever witnessed.

Thirty thousand soldiers will be brought from Aldershot and other military camps to line the streets on Friday, when the procession passes. As there is no room to barrack them over night, the soldiers will bivouac in the parks and the streets. The city will have the appearance of an infested town for two days. Some of the soldiers will sleep in tents in the parks, while the remainder will lie down beside their guns in the streets.

700,000 People to See Body.

It is expected that 700,000 people will pass through Westminster hall to look upon the coffin. Barriers are being built, by means of which the people will be ushered through in four lines at the rate of 15,000 an hour. The body of the late king will not be exposed to view. The mourners will see only the coffin, with the official regalia and heaps of flowers.

The flowers alone contributed by organizations and individuals will represent many thousands of dollars in value. The most elaborate wreath has been sent from Windsor, consisting of costly white flowers, interwoven with purple, which is the royal mourning.

Fabulous prices are being asked for seats in the stands along the line, $25 being the lowest sum at which it is possible to get a place.

United States Represented.

Henry White, former ambassador of the United States to France, who is now in Europe, has been designated by the president as diplomatic delegate from this country to the funeral of King Edward VII. The American delegation, of which Colonel Roosevelt will be the head, will consist of Mr. White, Commander Andrew, T. Long, naval attache of the American embassy at Vienna, and T. Beatley Mott, military attache at Paris, the two latter to act in the capacity of aides to Mr. [illegible].

Figures showing the number of returns, assessments and penalties on account of the tax of one per cent on the net income of corporations under the new tariff act have been made public by R. E. WANTS VANDERBILT.

Dallas, Texas, Would Like to Have University Located There.

Dallas, Texas, wants Vanderbilt university brought to that city from its present location at Nashville, Tenn., and so anxious is the Texas city to have this famous institution established there that offers of fabulous sums and many acres of ground will be made to the board of trust, as an inducement when the affairs of the university come up for discussion before the conference.

The board of trade of Dallas is interesting itself in the movement of the school and has offered $400,000 cash and as much as will be necesary, together with a choice site for the school's location.

TAKES HIS LIFE.

Well-Known Merchant of Seney, Ala., Blows Out Brains.

Despondent over business and bad health, W. M. Callahan, aged 56, a well-known merchant of Seney, Ala., committed suicide by blowing out his brains with a 32-calibre revolver. An inquest was held at Seney and the coroner's jury reached the verdict that Callahan came to his death from two pistol shots.

Callahan was formerly paymaster at Byrd's Station. Afterwards he disposed of his business at Seney and moved to a place near Atlanta. While there his house was struck by lightning and he was injured. Since that time his health has been declining.

ALDRICH CROWD BEATEN.

New Combination of Democrats and Republicans.

A new combination of democrats and progressive republicans have taken control of the senate and adopted the long and short-haul amendment to the railroad bill. It is predicted they will continue to dominate the senate while the railroad bill is under consideration.

SENATOR ALDRICH.

The Aldrich crowd saw themselves beaten, and to avoid the humiliation of a public defeat, abandoned their former position and supported the substitute amendment offered by Senator Dixon, of Montana. This substitute was agreed upon at an open conference held on the floor of the senate during a recess of one hour. It was practically the amendment offered by Governor Payne, of Kentucky, democrat.

RISKED LIVES, LOST THEM.

Three Daring Men Are Drowned Off the Alabama Coast.

The daring of William Olson, son of the lighthouse keeper at Fort Morgan, Ala.; William Peterson, ex-sailor, and Albert Thomas, three men employed as laborers at Fort Morgan, Ala., has doubtless cost their lives. After finishing their labors Thursday afternoon the missing men, accompanied by a painter named Zyboski, crossed the channel to Fort Gaines, about three miles from Fort Morgan. All with the exception of Zyboski resolved to return to Fort Morgan in spite of a gale blowing 40 miles an hour, also of a strong outgoing channel current. Efforts to find the party have been fruitless, and the only hope, a meager one, is some vessel has picked up the frail craft. A tug boat searched surrounding islands without result.

SERVANTS MURDERED.

Think They Were Victims of Burglars Who Entered Residence.

Evidently the victims of burglars, Charles W. Beman, a hindoo butler, and Margaret Meshan, an aged housekeeper, were found murdered in the residence of Dr. Mott D. Cannon, in West 122nd street, New York City.

The two had been killed some time during the physician's absence. Returning, Dr. Cannon discovered the bodies.

The butler, who was 25 years of age, and the old housekeeper had both been shot.

Examination of the physician's study showed that the top drawer of a bureau had been "jimmied" open and $100 in bills, $100 in silver, and several valuable gold stickpins taken. Nothing else in the house was touched.

KAISER MEETS TEDDY.

Roosevelt Meets Cordial Welcome From German Emperor.

Theodore Roosevelt, advocate of international peace with the big stick, and Kaiser Wilhelm II, Europe's strenuous war lord, met Tuesday for the first time.

Though the death of Edward VII altered the official plans for the reception of the ex-president of the United States, the kaiser gave him a brotherly welcome. Shortly after his arrival here from Stockholm, Mr. Roosevelt, accompanied by his family, was whisked out to the royal estate at Potsdam. There the party were received with open arms and little show of formality.

CHANGE OF FRONT.

Tennessee Republicans Join Anti-Patterson Democrats.

Leaders of the republican party in Tennessee held a conference at the white house at Washington and practically decided not to put a judicial ticket in the field in the coming elections, but to join with anti-Patterson democrats in the support of an independent ticket.

Since the pardon of Colonel Duncan Cooper, who was convicted of the murder of former Senator Carmack, there has been much dissatisfaction in the democratic ranks and the attitude of the republicans, therefore, was a matter of great moment.

Great improvements in terminal facilities at Jacksonville, Fla., are to be made by the Southern railway and the Georgia Southern and Florida railway through the St. John River Terminal Company.

BOAT STRIKES ROCK

Fatal Accident Occurs on the Mississippi River.

THIRTEEN PASSENGERS DROWN

Steamer Saltillo Driven Against Rock in River Below St. Louis and Turned Over With Most Disastrous Results to Passengers and Crew.

Thirteen persons, seven of them passengers, are reported to have lost their lives in the sinking of the steamer City of Saltillo in the Mississippi river at Glen Park, Mo. The boat was thrown against a rock by the swift current two hours after her start from the wharf at St. Louis. Glenn Park is 24 miles below St. Louis.

Glenn Park, the scene of the accident, is a river landing, the chief buildings of which are a general store, a boarding house and a cement plant. The place is almost inaccessible to telegraph lines and the news of the disaster came in a roundabout way from Kimmswick and Sulphur Springs.

Shortly before reaching Glenn Park the Saltillo encountered a shoreward draw which was fought frantically by the pilots. The engines were reversed but the efforts to prevent the collision were unavailing. As the big boat swung from the current inshore despite the reversed engines and the rudder thrown hard over, she was driven with increasing speed toward land and turned completely around.

With the noise of rending timbers and the shrieks of women and children passengers, the cries of the crew and the bellowing of the cattle, the vessel struck a hidden rock and sank almost in reach of land at a point where the water was 20 feet deep.

HEINZE ACQUITTED.

After Long Legal Battle Financier Is Cleared of Charges.

Augustus Heinze has been acquitted in New York of misapplying the funds of the Mercantile National bank while he was president of the institution in 1907, and he was cleared of the charge of overcertifying the checks of his brother's firm, Otto Heinze & Co. A jury in the criminal branch of the United States circuit court, after a trial lasting nearly three weeks, found him not guilty, and he was discharged.

Thus failed ingloriously the federal government's attempt to hold Heinze responsible for financiering during the panic of three years ago alleged to be in violation of the national banking laws. Charles W. Morse got fifteen years for "bank wrecking," but Heinze's transactions were held legal, notwithstanding the prosecution's vigorous attempt to prove him a gambler with millions not his own.

BAPTISTS AT BALTIMORE.

Over Two Thousand Delegates Attend Big Convention.

More than 2,500 delegates are at Baltimore to attend the Southern Baptist Convention. Joshua Levering, of Baltimore, is president of the convention, and it was authoritatively stated that he will be re-elected to that office.

Having no legislative authority, the convention will simply approve or disapprove questions, but it probably will take a stand on the liquor and other important issues.

It will be asked to approve requests for about $1,350,000 for various works of the denomination. St. Joseph, Mo., Fort Worth and other Texas cities and Jacksonville, Fla., are in the contest for securing the next convention.

FOUR HUNDRED EARTHQUAKES.

San Jose Has Been Shaking Steadily For a Month.

The earth tremors continue at San Jose. In the month since April 13, 400 distinct shocks have been recorded. The volcanoes of the vicinity exhibit no special activities.

It is estimated that a force of 2,000 men would be required for six months to clear the ruins of Carthage. Half that number of men is engaged under good organization. Samuel T. Lee, the American consul at San Jose, is active in the work of rescue.

Committee's Finding In Bishop Morrison's Case.

CHARGES WERE THROWN OUT

After Investigating, Committee Decided Unanimously That No Trial on Any of the Charges Lodged Was Necessary.

Bishop H. C. Morrison will not be tried by the general conference of the Southern Methodists in session at Asheville, N. C.

The committee on investigation in the case of Bishop Morrison decided unanimously that no trial on any of the charges lodged was necessary, and all were thrown out.

The matter of the bishop's character now goes back to the committee on episcopacy and it is generally believed that it will report against superannuation. In case of a negative report, however, the question will be fought out on the floor of the conference.

WESLEYAN IS CLOSED.

Macon Institution May Suspend for Term on Account of Typhoid.

Wesleyan Female College, at Macon, Ga., has been ordered closed probably for the term, by President Ainsworth. Several days ago a number of the students became sick and physicians stated that two of the girls had typhoid and three more showed symptoms of having contracted the disease.

It is expected that most of the students, the majority of them being non-residents, will leave for their homes at once. There are approximately 300 young ladies at the institution, and they come from nearly every state in the union.

MORE FALSE HAIR IS WORN

Much of It Is Now Imported from Japan and India on Account of Lower Prices.

London.—Japan and India alike contribute to the fashionable coiffure of the day, which has enormously increased the already large demand for false hair.

Curls are being revived, the long tails remain, and the return of waves has caused a great rush for transformations.

"More transformations are being sold at present than have been for the last six months," the proprietor of a well-known Oxford street establishment said.

"Waved hair is again the fashion, and transformations are a necessity to the woman with straight hair if she wishes to appear always the same, and is at the mercy of the weather.

"The craze for false hair has brought quantities of cheap hair into the market. This is not the natural colored hair, but coarse, dark hair, that has to be bleached or dyed different shades.

"It is imported largely from Japan and India. Many women will not pay for the natural hair, which is generally obtained from European countries, when they can purchase an article that appears to them as effective.

"The beautiful natural hair cannot be obtained at cheap rates. The faked hair has, of course, a comparatively short life.

"More women wear false hair nowadays because the artist in hairdressing is much more skilled than in former times, and the addition to a woman's own hair cannot be easily detected.

"Tails of hair have to be long to be of use in the present mode of hairdressing," a representative of a Bond street firm said. "Some switches are 36 inches in length."

COURT ADVISES A WHALING

Delaware Judge Gives Unique Instructions to Man Whose Wife Flirted with Another.

Wilmington, Del.—"The next time you catch this man with your wife give him a good whaling, but be careful not to use any weapons in so doing." These were the instructions given by Judge Cochran in the city court the other morning to John B. Hancock, who had been arraigned for assault and battery upon William Rose, a much younger man. Rose did not have to testify to the assault, for his face was ample evidence.

"He is a most jealous hearted man," explained Mrs. Hancock, referring to her husband. "I was talking to a young man at Sixth and Poplar streets when he came up and beat him awful."

"She has been going with that man, judge," said Hancock. "I beat him yesterday, sir, because I want him to keep away from my wife. I considered it my duty."

When asked by the court if it were true that he had been going with Mrs. Hancock, Rose stammered and said: "Well, I was led into it."

"Oh, you were," commented the court. "Well, you got what you deserved then. And, Hancock, the next time you see him with your wife give him another thrashing. You are dismissed."

"I will that, sir," replied Hancock, as he walked defiantly from one door of the courtroom while his wife left by another.

New Business for Women.

Miss Edna Blanchard Lewis is a New York woman who has originated and now directs the only insurance department in the world run exclusively for women. There is a splendid field for women in this work, she says, and it is comparatively easy to work up from the ranks. The first step is to become an agent. She herself had been a school teacher, but found the work uncongenial, so became the agent for an insurance company, with most of her work in the colleges of Smith, Wellesley, Mount Holyoke and Vassar.

ROYALTY ON ITS TRAVELS

Good Stories Told by Senator Depew of the Doings of Potentates of Hawaii.

Senator Depew of New York, famous as an after-dinner speaker, told two good stories in the senate while he was speaking on a bill to regulate the government of Hawaii. He said, in reviewing the history of the islands, that the king and queen of the islands once came to America and then went to Europe.

"An incident of this trip," said the senator, "was one of the rare contributions to the sedate movement of history, which promotes good fellowship by adding to the gaiety of nations. Chicago received the king with impressive ceremonies on his arrival. After a weary day of parades and reviews the then mayor of the metropolis of the west found a king on his hands. Kings were not in his line, nor was he familiar with their attributes, the customs of court or the methods of addressing them. To relieve himself of embarrassment he drove his majesty to the leading hotel, and, leaving him in the lobby, said: 'Good afternoon, king; we have had a hard day, and I think you had better go up to your room and wash up.'

"When their majesties arrived in London they were entertained by royalty and were guests at Windsor," continued the senator. "There was a current story at the time," he said, "that at the dinner the Hawaiian queen said to Queen Victoria: 'Your majesty, I am a blood relative.' To the astonished inquiry, 'How so?' the Hawaiian queen answered, 'My grandfather ate Capt. Cook.'"

To Stop Nail Biting.

Nail biting is a very common habit among children and is often the result of an extremely nervous temperament. It is a good plan to take such a child to a doctor, who will probably give him a good tonic to brace up the nervous system. The child should also have pointed out to him how ugly his nails and fingers are getting. Show him how to keep his nails clean and well trimmed and try and induce him to take a pride in them. A good plan is to interest him in kindergarten work of some kind that will keep both his hands and brain employed; if this is done the chances are that very soon the habit will disappear.

Telephones in Mines.

Although the use of telephones in mines is not of recent origin, the advantages are, perhaps, hardly really appreciated until they have once been tried. Probably at no time in the history of mining has there been a greater demonstration of the great need of telephones in mines than at the Cherry coal mine disaster. How many more lives could have been saved had the mine been fully equipped with telephones is entirely problematical, but it is certain that the number would have been greater had opportunity been afforded for communication between the rescuers and the entombed men.—Philadelphia Record.

I like Foley Kidney Pills so well that I have told many of my friends and comrades about them and shall recommend them at every opportunity." Upchurch Drug Co.

BOY GETS OLD STRADIVARIUS

Mrs. Joseph Drexel Presents Instrument Valued at $10,000 to Young Italian Musician.

Philadelphia.—Few violinists, even after they become great, own a real Stradivarius, but this good fortune has fallen to Domanico Bove, the young Italian of this city, whose career, many believe, will rival Kubelik's.

Most interesting of all is the fact that this musical treasure was the property of the late Antonin Dvorak, the composer, from whose widow the violin was recently purchased by Mrs. Joseph Drexel and by her presented to the youthful Bove. Mrs. Drexel is widely known as a patron of music, and, interested as she has been in the young violinist's career, it is but natural that she should choose him for the honor of owning a Stradivarius.

It is whispered that Mrs. Drexel paid $15,000 for the instrument, which gives an idea of what such a gift means in prosaic dollars and cents.

Victim of Time Clock.

New York.—The time clock system in the New York finance department has claimed its first victim.

Comptroller Prendergast announced the other day the discharge of a $1,400 clerk in the auditing bureau. The time sheet showed the clerk had been late at work eight times during the months of January and Febuary.

The comptroller declared that unless the time sheets of several other employes show an improvement this month they may expect a similar fate.

Growth of Farm Values.

Farms of the United States, with their buildings, implements, and live stock, are today worth almost $30,000,000,000. No such increase in agricultural values was ever before known in the history of the world in any country. The farm product of the year just closed was worth almost four times as much as the product of 1859.

A bill is to be introduced by Senator Screws of Montgomery in the next session of the legislature providing for an executive mansion for the governor and his family. This is in keeping with the advance of the State. Alabama certainly can afford an executive mansion and we hope to see the bill pass.

One of the largest crowds that ever assembled at the Grand theater cheered to the echo Tuesday afternoon every reference that was made at the state democratic convention to a modification of the present prohibition laws of Alabama. Galleries, balcony and auditorium arose en masse at every mention of Col. Emmett O'Neal, governor elect, and halls and corridors fairly buzzed with opinions as to the best means of effecting a modification along the local option plan.

In his speech of acceptance, before the state democratic convention Tuesday, Col. Emmet O'Neal, came frankly out for the repeal of those laws passed by the present legislature that seek to deprive citizens of well established constitutional rights. "If the policy of statewide prohibition is to be maintained," he said, "we must purge from the statutes those provisions which invade constitutional guarantees and violate well established legal rights."

He advocates, also, a liberal and conservative attitude to capital, whether local or foreign, and urges new mining laws that will make impossible the fearful accidents that have recently shocked the state. More inspectors ought to be had, he states, and these better paid, and the penalties should be enforceable. And, in addition, some provision should be made to take care of the families of the miners at any time killed, that they may not be left to penury and want.

James G. Weatherby, of Birmingham, was elected chairman of the convention, and Will T. Sheehan, secretary.

The local option plank adopted in 1906 was reaffirmed, believing that a departure in practice from the principal then announced was a departure from the time-honored Democratic doctrine of local self-government, and was not in furtherance of the cause of temperance.

The convention adjourned at an early hour Wednesday morning.

Tyler Goodwyn was elected chairman of the Democratic State Executive Committee.

Director Campbell of the Lick observatory Monday gave out a statement concerning Halley's comet. In part it is: "Halley's comet was 90 degrees long at daybreak Monday morning, both as photographed and as observed by the naked eye. This corresponds to a length of 24,000,000 miles. The nearest point of the comet was 11,000,000 miles from the earth. Tuesday morning it will be nearly 7,000,000 miles away, Wednesday morning a little over 2,000,000 miles, and Wednesday evening the earth will be passed through the tail. The present diameter of the tail at the point through which the earth will pass is a little over 1,000,000 miles from the body. The two bodies will have a relative velocity of 43,000,000 miles per second and the time required for the passage, if the present dimensions remain unchanged and there is no collision or impact, will be six hours."

"It is very unfortunate that the moon, nearly full, will interfere with optical observations of the phenomenon attending our passage through the tail. If the moon were absent there is little doubt that we should see the sky filled with fragments of the Halley comet. Probably lagging of the tail remain in the tail the greater part of Wednesday night, and some evidence of its presence may be seen above, or under it," concluded the director.

On Saturday the comet will be nearest the earth, distant then only 14,380,000 miles.

On May 26 Congressional committees will hear the several reasons New Orleans and San Francisco have to advance in support of their rival claims to recognition as the official Panama Exposition city. Both have $5,000,000 in sight. Both claim the canal will make them greater cities and greater ports. New Orleans will advance the further claim that it is the logical point, in that it is the practical North American sea port center of North and South American population, and that it can be reached with less difficulty and less travel by seven times more people than San Francisco. Further that it is the logical sea port for nearly all the Mississippi Valley States. In proof of this claim the New Orleans delegation, which will be a strong one, will exhibit a large map so circled as to show the population in the territory within reach of the two cities. This map will play a big part in the discussions. It indicates that by the census of 1900—the last figures available—there are 17,000,000 people living in North and Central America within 500 miles of New Orleans, 65,000,000 within 1000 miles, and 90,000,000 within 500 miles, as against 2,000,000, 6,000,000 and 17,000,000 respectively within similar distance of San Francisco, and that while the people of Mexico, Central and South America can reach New Orleans easily, many of these people, to reach San Francisco at all must pass through New Orleans and then make the long trip across the continent.

The New Orleans delegation is receiving the endorsement and backing of the Mississippi Valley, many states in the East, and several Central American Republics, and expects to profit by this support when it appears before Congress on May 26.

The official count of the democratic primary of May 2, made by the state democratic committee Monday shows that Emmett O'Neal, the local option candidate, received 70,761; H. S. D. Mallory, the prohibitionist, 57,734—majority, 13,030. It is thus shown that the total vote was 128,501.

Walter D. Seed, the statewide prohibitionist, received 64,618; Perry Thomas, local option, 53,743, for lieutenant governor. John H. Bankhead, present senator, for the senate of the United States, received 67,027, White 32,559, and Knox 15,820.

The stockade of the convict camp of the Red Feather Coal Company, at Lucile Mines, in Bibb county, about fifteen miles north of Centerville, was completely destroyed by fire at an early hour Monday morning and that thirty-five convicts were burned to death and one shot to death while trying to escape.

The message stated that a convict, in trying to escape from the stockade, set it on fire and at soon the whole structure was blazing. On account of the extreme dryness the building was rapidly consumed.

Sending money out of town for things that can be bought at home is like cutting down the tree to get its fruits. The money ceases to produce in your community and the city is made poorer by the transaction.—Birmingham News.

Rev. J. H. McCoy, of Birmingham, was elected a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, at the general conference at Asheville, N. C.

No other fertilizer is so much needed by most Southern soils, and not until stable manure, rather than commercial fertilizers, is looked upon as the great essential to the maintenance of a fertile soil, will it be possible to economically build up the waste lands of the South.—Starkville (Miss.) The House last Thursday passed the resolution of Representative Craig of Alabama, directing the Attorney General to transmit to the House all facts in his possession concerning alleged violations of the Sherman anti-trust act by persons or combinations in attempting to advance the price of cotton, investigations of which are being conducted in New Orleans and New York. The resolution also asked whether an investigation or prosecution was ever begun against persons for combining to advance the price of wheat in May and July of last year.

Asked what results of the resolution he expected, Mr. Craig said:

"The fact that my resolution was passed almost unanimously by the House shows, I think, that the country at large is anxious to see fair play. I believe that the result of this congressional investigation will be either that the Attorney General will be forced to admit that there are no real grounds of prosecution against the southern cotton merchants, or if there are such grounds, that he will be forced to investigate the other side of the question and prosecute the men who for years have conspired to make cheap cotton. I believe also that he will be forced to investigate the alleged wheat corner of last year, because by the passage of this resolution it is brought clearly before the country that while men alleged to be in combination to advance the price of cotton are being prosecuted, those who cornered wheat last year and ran the price up to $1.35 a bushel have not been molested.

"The ultimate result of this agitation, I think, will be to make more pronounced the fact that the men who are selling cotton that they do not own and do not expect to deliver, and who are therefore gamblers pure and simple, are going to be forced to quit their nefarious practices and thereby leave a clean and honest market for both the producer and the cotton merchant who buys and sells the actual staple, whether for present or future delivery."

"The most cosmopolitian gathering which ever met on the continent" is the way the World's Sunday school convention, which opens in Washington next Thursday, is described at the headquarters of the World's Sunday school association in this city. For more than a year lines from all over the world have been converging in the office of Dr. George W. Bailey, the executive head of the organization, and he now announces that more than 50 nations will be officially represented in the 8000 who will gather at the capital May 19-24. For four months past the office in this city has been refusing delegates' credentials to applicants, as the quotas of the states were already filled.

The largest organization in existence excepting only the Christian church, of which it is a part, is the Sunday school, say the leaders here. It has more than 26,000,000 members, found in every nation under heaven except possibly Thibet. While the bulk of the schools and all the association are to be found in the various Protestant denominations, the Sunday school as an institution yet existed also among the Roman Catholics, the Hebrews, the Mormons and Buddhists. In North America there are above 16,000,000 members of the Sunday school and every state and province is completely organized.

The regular sessions of the convention will number 178, with speakers to the number of 300, including President Taft, Ambassador Bryce, John Wanamaker, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Charles M. Alexander, and many bishops and other distinguished men and women from abroad. The wife of Vice President Sherman will preside over one of the mass meetings of the women. The Rev. B. F. Myer of London, President of the World's Sunday School association, will preside.

A daily "roll call of nations" will be used in order to enable all the large nations to find a place on the programme. The British delegates to the number of nearly 200 will arrive in Philadelphia tomorrow. Next Sunday, May 22, will be observed by churches throughout the world as "World's Sunday school day." A uniform programme has been issued by millions of copies and translated into more than 200 languages and dialect.

Verbena

Editor Banner:—The Verbena District Sunday school convention, was held at Mt. Creek Baptist church, May 15. It was the finest meeting we have ever had, every Sunday school was represented and gave a better report than ever before. Before the convention begin, the Sunday school met, and enjoyed a fine talk on the lesson by Mr. E. L. Thornton.

After Sunday school president Robinson being present begin with the program.

The first on the program, being Mr. T. E. Williams gave us a fine talk, followed by Mr. Glass of Birmingham. Next came time for dinner, which was bountiful, and enjoyed by all. Next was a fine talk by Mr. E. L. Thornton; next was a fine talk by Mrs. W. S. Alston and Mr. L. N. Henderson. Last on program was a most interesting talk by Miss Mary Carr Gibson. All that know Miss Gibson know that we had something fine, and we feel sure if we had more Miss Gibsons we would have more and better Sunday schools.

Up to this date there has been only two of the Sunday schools paid their dues to the county for the county during this year.

The County Convention will be held at Verbena this year, and we ask the Superintenders to see that this money be paid to Miss M. C. Gibson before the County Convention in July.

Thanking the people of Mountain Creek for their kindness.

I am respectfully yours,
AGNES FARR, Secretary.

Editor Banner:—Our Sunday school district. It has been quite awhile since we have heard anything on this subject in district six. I do not know what the wish of the people is. Some kicked on holding Sunday conventions and at our convention at Alpine in May, 1909 it was unamiously voted to be held on Saturday on the plea that Sunday conventions demoralized every school in the district At our next convention we had our superintendent and not a single member that was appointed on the program. At our next convention we had only one superintendent and not a member on program at our next convention which was held with Pleasant Grove Baptist church, we had two superintendents, one member on program and three delegates from other schools and so I tendered at once my resignation to the county president, but never did hear any more from it. I would be glad to find some one in the district who is interested in the work and if possible resurrect this dead district. N. L. Broadhead.

Mr. Bankhead Has Grateful Feeling.

Senator Bankhead has issued the following statement to the people:

To the Democratic Voters of Alabama:

Now, that the primary election is over, and, according to the returns, I have been nominated to have a full term of my seat in the United States senate, I take this method to express my gratitude to you for your cordial indorsement of my candidacy and to thank the voters for their expressions of confidence in my character as a citizen and of my record as a public servant.

I have no desire now to refer to the value of my efforts to serve the people of Alabama in the halls of congress. It may be that I have made mistakes of judgment upon questions of federal legislation affecting the vital interests of my people; and, if so, those who differ with me as to questions of policy will surely be generous enough not to doubt the honesty of my convictions nor the purity of my motives in an attempt to do all that one could do to promote the material development of our natural resources and to make permanent the prosperity and happiness of our people. I shall continue to advocate let be senate laws for federal aid to public road construction and for the adequate improvement of our navigable rivers and harbors and the development of our water powers, for the extension and enlargement of the rural free delivery service and its consequent benefit to the country people, for a reduction of the tariff legislation, as well as promote the interests of agriculture, and for all other matters of legislation which, in my judgment, will best conserve the welfare of the people of Alabama.

I am particularly gratified that in the contest for the senatorial nomination neither of my honorable opponents lodged any complaint against my public record.

Alabama is my native heath. Here I was born, and here I will be buried. I have no interest to serve, as we here and her people's, and to the end that efficient service may be rendered, I ask the sympathy and advice of all my fellow-citizens.

I am unwilling to close this statement without a special acknowledgement of my hearty and cordial appreciation of the invaluable services rendered me by the press, and especially by the county newspapers of the istate, to whose partiality and loyalty o the campaign I am and shall always be deeply indebted.

Very truly,

J. H. Bankhead.

Jasper, Ala., May 15, 1910.

PLENTY OF HOG AND HOMINY

Better for Southern Farmer to Raise All His Home Supplies and Be Independent of North.

It is insisted by some that the farmer is "free, white and 21" and does not need to be instructed by others in regard to his duty to grow plenty of provisions, restrict the area in cotton, enlarge the area in grain, raise his own bacon. I agree to that proposition in the main, but must insist that many a farmer knows what others want him to do, but all the same, he will not heed, writes R. J. Redding in Atlanta Constitution. Every one will admit that it would be better for the farmers of the south as a whole to produce all needed supplies so that no one state would be obliged to send north or west—outside of her own borders—for such obviously necessary things as corn and hay, bacon and lard, beef and butter, and, in some states, at least, wheat and flour.

But the truth is that so many farmers, while agreeing to the general proposition, think that it is well for others to do the home-supply act, but "as for me, give me liberty"—to grow cotton and buy corn and hay; to grow cotton and buy bacon and lard; to grow cotton and buy mules and horses, or "give me death," of debt and nonprosperity. Wouldn't it be fine for Farmer Cotton Bale if every other fellow would cut down his cotton area one-third and raise plenty of hog and hominy and everything that Mr. Cotton Bale will be likely to need? Wouldn't it do his heart good if the output of cotton shall thus be limited to 10,000,000, or less, and corn be plenty and to burn, smokehouses bursting with cheap bacon and lard, and everything he needs brought to his door at his own price?

But the obstacles in the way of this rosy desire and expectation is the fact that so many of the other fellows are his own kith and kin, and are so shrewd and selfish, maybe, as he; and so the scheme Mr. Cotton Bale would like to see operated falls to the ground.

The simple truth is that even were cotton now selling at 20 cents a pound it would be a very unwise course for farmers to neglect these home supplies and go in for a big crop of cotton this year. Possibly even a large crop—above 12,000,000 bales—may fetch a good price, but I doubt it, capitally.

The price has been between 14 and 15 cents quite a good while, and although it seems that it ought to go up, the fact is it doesn't go up, and maybe it will not. High prices for cotton will be followed by high prices for cotton goods or—the mills must shut down and consumption will fall off, for it is certain that the people are not going to consume more cotton unless it be manufactured. But, hold on; I am about to embark in what sounds much like one of these "cotton letters," when the truth is, nobody knows what is in the near future in regard to cotton. I note, however, that on the 16th instant, in New York city, October futures were below 13 cents.

There is one thing I do know—in fact, we all know it—and it is this: As a rule, with but few exceptions, the steadily prosperous, progressive, debt-free farmers of the south are found among those who "live at home and board at the same place," as the common saying is. They have plenty of home-raised hog products, nice milk and butter to eat and to sell a few fat beeves for sale every year, raise enough mules and horses to keep up their working horsepower, and always have corn and hay to keep and to spare.

Another observed fact: The prosperous former, as a rule, is the one who rotates his crops, has home-made manures for his cornfields and his truck patches, grows plenty of oats and cowpeas, and whose farm is slowly but surely growing richer and more productive as the years go by.

Concerted effort to reduce cotton acreage and increase food crops is all very well, as far as it goes, and as far as it succeeds. No doubt such efforts result in some measure of success; but I have steadily believed that the best and most fruitful arguments are those that appeal to the self-interest of the individual farmer, and not those that are addressed to farmers as a class. Patriotism is not in it, and appeals to that sentiment are more than likely to fall on deaf ears. The average farmer must be convinced that it is to his personal interest and future prosperity to adopt and stick to it through thick and thin) a conservative, land-improving, self-sustaining policy.

Something About Horses.

Make friends with your horses. They will enjoy your sociability as well as you will. Sensible horses like to be talked to by sensible people.

Have an extra rope, with a snap on one end, hanging up in the horses' stalls, so it will not be necessary to untie the rope from the manger every time you take the horse out of the barn.

An expert in horse phrenology says a horse which is wide from the bone behind the ears down to the outer corner of the eye is intelligent.

In proportion to its size the horse has a smaller stomach than any other quadruped.

Dairying in Southwest.

Southern stock will be on succulent pasture nearly sixty days before northern stock, and can remain on pasture for a much longer period. That's one reason why the southwest is going to be a great dairying and live stocking country.

PRAYERS NEVER PASSED OVER

First Thought in the Mind of Mohammedan Is His Duty of Devotion to Allah.

"And while we three white men of a Christian race stuffed ourselves without preliminary or postprandial grace, and our shenzi porters gracelessly gorged themselves like beasts, scarce 20 feet from our table stood the noble form of old Regal and the spare ascetic-faced Awala, musically intoning their evening prayer to Allah, oblivious to all about as if alone in a monastic cell. It was a majestic rebuke to us, a weird mystery to the shenzi, whose voices were always lowered when the Somals began to pray, and who sat contemplating them in wild-eyed wonder to the end of each prayer, awed, almost silent—as were we ourselves silent out of the sheer respect for a religion which can give men such perfect self-control that no danger daunts them and no hardship or suffering wrings from them a plaint.

"Five times a day do they so pray—at dawn, at high noon, at four, at sunset and before retiring—nor can anything interfere to delay these prayers, not even hungry masters. And before addressing Allah, mouth face and hands are carefully washed, the best turban wound about the head, the freshest garments donned, the feet bared, then with a glance at the sun, if by day, or at the stars, if by night, to get their compass bearings, they spread their rugs, face towards Mecca, and begin a low, droning chant that at a little distance might easily be mistaken for a well-intoned litany."—From In Closed Territory, by Edgar Beecher Bronson.

RULE THAT SEEMS GOOD ONE

Gambler Always Ascertains Whether Luck Is with Him or Not Before He "Sits In."

"There's no use in trying to buck against bad luck," said the successful gambler as he set down his glass of vichy and milk. "If you see luck is going against you, drop out. If the fickle goddess of fortune is with you, woo her for all you are worth. That's the whole secret of the game.

"I've been gambling all my life, and I rarely lose. Why? Because I never take a chance against bad luck. Luck is bound to be either with you or against you. You win or you lose. The chances of breaking even are mighty slim. And who wants to break even, anyhow?

"Luck always runs in streaks. I can generally dope out whether I am going to be lucky or not, and when I know it isn't my time to win I simply don't play. How do I know? Well, I have a little system of my own, and I don't mind letting you in on it. Before I sit into a game I try out my luck in the seclusion of my own apartment. I take a deck of cards and start to play solitaire, Canfield against an imaginary banker. In five or six deals I can get an idea whether luck is with me at that particular time or not. If the cards are running consistently against me I stop and spend the evening at the theater, or chinning around the hotel lobbies. No game for me that night. On the other hand, if I see the cards are running my way I get into a game, and seldom quit a loser. It may sound foolish, but take my word for it, it's a pretty good dope to go by."

Virtue of the Playground.

Children are better in playgrounds than in prison. It is better for the community to have children exercising on ladders and horizontal bars and swings than to have them haunting the doors of poolrooms or smoking cigarettes in the hidden shadows. Children with plenty of playground have a better chance with life than children without. And most children are without unless the community provides them. It is cheaper to amuse them than to arrest. It is cheaper to develop than to dwarf. It is cheaper to save than to sink them.—Salt Lake Herald.

An Indigestion Remedy Free

Many people who are otherwise healthy suffer from indigestion, or dyspepsia. When you consider that the stomach and allied digestive organs are the most important organs of the body, it would seem that a disorder there is to be taken very seriously.

Dyspeptics cannot eat the things they like; food sours in the stomach, then chronic constipation begins, or, as is often the case, you have been constipated all along, and the stools are forced and irregular.

But there is no use letting indigestion go until it becomes chronic and undermines your health. It is good advice to suggest to you that you go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the wonderful cure for stomach, liver and bowel troubles. That is what C. Fowler, of Carson City, Mich., did and he is well today. Others who did the same and are cured are Ida A. Fortune, of Grand Junction, Tenn., B. F. Thompson, of Shenandoah, Ia., who actually considers that it saved his life. You can obtain a 50-cent or $1 bottle of the druggist, and, taken according to directions, it will probably be all you need. It is a liquid, acts gently, never gripes, and besides the laxative effect, contains exceptional tonic properties which tone the stomach, and that is what is especially needed in indigestion.

All sufferers from indigestion who have never used Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can obtain a free test bottle by writing the doctor. It will be sent direct to your home without any charge. In this way thousands have proven to their own satisfaction Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the very remedy they needed to cure indigestion. When once you use this grand remedy you will throw violent cathartics, tablets, salts, etc., away.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

NONE TO DO HIM REVERENCE

Sad Time, Indeed, for the One Time Political Boss, When He Is "Down and Out."

No better exposition of the cold-blooded nature of the political machine, with the quick desertion of its adherents when "there's nothing to it," could there be than the lonely death of the man who ruled New York state and for a while made governors, senators, and even tried his hand at president-making, says the New York Post.

A man who called to see him in his little Eleventh street flat about a year ago asked if it was in this place he received his friends.

"I have no friends," said the old man bitterly.

"But your old associates, the men for whom you did things; surely they come to see you?"

"No, they don't."

"But how about your classmates in Yale—are any of them alive?"

"I don't know," was the indifferent reply.

"Don't you ever go down to the Yale club?"

"I never was a member of the Yale club."

Another reference to neglectful friends seemed to wake in him a new vigor.

"I'll expose them, I'll expose them," he exclaimed. "I'm writing my memoirs, and I'll expose them."

What Others Say About It.

Many of the best people in Tennessee and adjoining states recommend St. Joseph's Liver Regulator as being a splendid laxative and liver medicine. Its occasional use will keep the system in good condition, thus assisting nature to establish good health. It will remove the pile and effete matter from the system, and as a rule, Nature "will do the rest," Try it. It is well endorsed. It is made in both liquid and powders. Druggists and dealers sell it, liquid, 50 cents a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25 cents a box. Upchurch Drug co.

INTEREST FARMER IN UNION

Texas Lecturer Tells of Many Difficulties in Getting Intelligent Man Into Organization.

While this county is not as thoroughly organized as it should be, we have some as good union ladies and men as there is in the state, and we are living up to unionism and keeping an eye on the other fellow. I am commissioned as lecturer and organizer by our state lecturer, and have been doing some general work of that kind in this county under contract with the County union, writes J. R. Maxey of Corrigan, Tex., in Co-Operator. But my contract is now filled with the County union, so I will now take up the work and organize where I can, and help the cause every way possible. I find the union spirit dominant in the great majority, but there is a carelessness akin to sluggishness about organizing or coming into the organization. They seem to think that they are no part of the element that composes the Farmer's Union or should compose it.

While they know it is a good thing and hope for its great success and defend the principles of the union, etc., yet it is a hard matter to enlist them in the order. Now, dear brothers in this great cause, it seems to me that we have got to redouble our efforts and enlist the non-union element—we have got to interest him in the union to such an extent as to create a desire to become a member. There are some that we have got to arrange some way to reach. By giving open meetings and public discussions of the principles of the Farmers' union and the necessity for organization. If we can't get a good speaker from a distance let us use home talent, there is always some one that is a good talker and can interest the people, and when a lecturer sends an appointment to a place see that it is well advertised and that everybody is cordially invited and requested to attend. Make it pleasant and interesting and not merely a function or an order of business that we feel under obligations to attend. It seems to me, in order to make the Farmers' union what it should be, or what it is intended to be, we have got to make a personal application of all the principles of the order. Realizing the condition of the great common people and the possibilities and the certainty of their deliverance from under the yoke of oppression and monopolistic greed, and the independence of the farmer through the administration of the principles of the Farmers' union it is a mystery to me why so many intelligent people will stay out of the organization that promises so much to them and theirs. In conclusion let me ask, even beg, all within the ranks of the Farmers' union to remember our obligations to one another, and in the name of justice and for the sake of our grand old order and our wives and children to stop their wrangling, and if there has been any wrong done we can right it through the order. But never out of it.

UNITE FOR MUTUAL BENEFIT

Successful Co-Operation Depends Much on Unity of Interests, Faith and Willingness to Learn.

We have perhaps not emphasized the importance of co-operation among farmers as much as we have some other things. We have always given most loyal support to any co-operative movement and especially urged farmers in building co-operative creameries and cheese factories, in forming co-operative breeding associations, cow-testing associations, etc., feeling that when these things were once well established among the farmers it would help to a more complete co-operation in other branches of agriculture, says Hoard's Dairyman.

Successful co-operation depends briefly upon three things. First, unity of interests. If farmers are not engaged largely in the same branch of agriculture there is great difficulty in getting them to co-operate. Second, they must have faith in one another. Most all business is conducted largely upon faith, and without it it is difficult to carry on ordinary business transactions. Third, a willingness to learn and to understand must be developed.

Men must become well informed upon the purpose and object of an organization before it can be expected they will give it their undivided support. Farmers as a class have been independent and have not felt the necessity of acting together.

The Danish farmer has given us a striking example of what can be accomplished through co-operation, but we have not been able to unite for mutual benefit to the same degree, largely because we have been following a different system of agriculture.

Fertilizer for Corn.

Fertilizer tests with corn show clearly that plowing under green leguminous crops is a highly beneficial practice, and that where this is followed only moderate amounts of fertility will be necessary to give increased yields; when vegetable matter is lacking, however, heavy applications of fertilizers seem advisable.

Buried Vegetables.

Cabbage, turnips, carrots, parsnips, salsify and potatoes are at their best after being pitted or buried in the ground a few months. The same is true of winter apples. Drainage must be perfect and the frost kept out by using straw and stones for a top covering.

The Death of John the Baptist

Sunday School Lesson for May 22, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 14:1-12. Memory verses, 10-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."—Prov. 16:32.

TIME.—John probably was beheaded in March A. D. 28, after spending a year in prison.

PLACE.—John was imprisoned at Machaerus, Herod's palace-fortress on the east of the Dead Sea.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

Herod: a Scoundrel on a Throne.—Who was the Herod that imprisoned John the Baptist? Four Herods are mentioned in the New Testament, and it is necessary to keep them distinct.

1. Herod the Great, king of Judea from 37 B. C. to 4 A. D., the Herod who ruled when Christ was born, and massacred the babies of Bethlehem. He was a cruel tyrant. He married ten wives and had many children, one of whom was

2. Herod the Tetrarch, called Herod Antipas, the ruler of Galilee and Perea from 4 A. D. to 39 A. D., or during our Lord's ministry. He was the Herod to whom Pilate sent Christ during his trial, and it was he who imprisoned John the Baptist.

3. Herod Agrippa I., grandson of Herod the Great, his father being Aristobulus, was king of Judea A. D. 41-44, having a realm equal to that of Herod the Great. It was he that slew James the brother of John, imprisoned Peter, accepted divine honor, and was miserably eaten up of worms.

4. Herod Agrippa II., son of the foregoing, was therefore great-grandson of Herod the Great. When Paul made his famous plea before Festus this Herod was present, with his sister-wife Bernice.

What was the character of Herod Antipas? He was a weak, sensual, and treacherous man. Our Lord spoke of him as 'that fox."

John: a Hero in a Dungeon.—Vs. 3-5. How did John the Baptist get into "the foxes den?" Josephus says that Herod imprisoned him because he feared that John's vast audiences might be used to foment a revolution. That may have been assigned in public as a pretext, but the reason given by Matthew is certainly the real one—that John had openly rebuked Herod for his unholy connection with his brother's wife.

Herodias: an Unnatural Mother.—Vs. 6-8. Who was Herodias, who was plotting against the prophet? She was the niece of Herod and of his brother Philip.

What opportunity did Herodias find for gaining her desire against John? Herod's birthday was kept with a brilliant feast "to his lords, and the high captains, and the chief men of Galilee" (Mark). "A luxurious feast of the period was not regarded as complete unless it closed with some gross pantomimic representation; and doubtless Herod had adopted the civil fashion of his day. But he had not anticipated for his guests the rare luxury of seeing a princess—his own niece, a granddaughter of Herod the Great and of Mariame, a descendant therefore of Simon the high priest and the great line of Maccabaean princes—a princess who afterward became the wife of a tetrarch and the mother of a king."—Farrar.

Who was this degraded girl? Her name was Salome, and she was the daughter of Herodias and her first husband, Philip.

What are we to think of Herod's promise, whatsoever she would ask? It shows that, weak and foolish as he was, his wits were inflamed and confused by wine.

Why did Salome go out and ask her mother what to ask (Mark)? This feature of the story does not look like a plot, or as if Herodias had not dared to confide the whole of it to her daughter. Should she ask for jewels, beautiful clothes, a palace? Prof. Stalker puts these words into the mother's mouth: "Little fool, you know not what you ask; what would all these things be to you and me unqueened and outcast as we may be any day if John the Baptist lives?" So the girl went back "straightway with haste" (Mark) and exclaimed: "My wish is that you give me here, immediately, on a dish, the head of John the Baptist." "Her indecent haste, her hideous petition, show that she shared the furies of her race."—Farrar.

The Transient Triumph of Wrong.—Vs. 9-12. How did Salome's request affect Herod? "The king was sorry" (Mark: "exceedingly sorry"). This was not genuine repentance, or Herod would have withdrawn his promise; since falsehood, though always a sin, is a far less sin than murder.

What was the close of the tragedy? The noble head was placed upon a charger—a broad, flat platter wont to contain meat for the table; and indeed the sight was meat to the vengeance-hungry Herodias. "The young dancing girl received it, and, now frightful as a Megaera, carried the hideous burden to her mother.

The Voice of Conscience. "We have all of us evils enough in these charnel houses of our memory to make us dread the awakening of conscience. Some trifle touches the hidden spring by mere accident; as in the old story of the man groping along a wall, till his finger happens to fall upon one inch of it, and immediately the concealed door flies open and there is the skeleton. An apparently trivial circumstance, like some hooked pole pushed into the sea, may bring up by the locks some pale and drowned memory long plunged in an ocean of oblivion."—Alexander Maclaren.

POULTRY

POULTRY NOTES.

Gather the eggs several times a day.

Clean out the nest boxes and burn the old straw.

The heavy laying hen usually lays a normal, medium sized egg.

Start right by getting better hens; end right by keeping them better.

Cull the surplus poultry. Keep only such fowls as you are assured are money-makers.

Do not try to start a new breed. There are plenty now, and you would be sure to get nothing but scrubs for your pains.

Lime is a great cleanser. Hens must have lime or they cannot manufacture eggshells. Lime is very useful about the poultry premises.

If your flock of hens does not produce a god average of fertile eggs, better introduce new blood. Secure some healthy males from another flock.

One necessity for the turkey raiser on the average farm is a tree for roosting purposes. A turkey does not like a house, but much prefers an open place to roost.

Many who keep the poultry houses clean overcrowd their chickens and then wonder why they lose their fowls. Let the chickens have plenty or rooms and fresh air.

Keep your chicks tame. It is a nuisance to have to use a shotgun to catch a chicken. Insubator chicks have this advantage, they are accustomed to being handled and are never rendered unmanageable through fright.

good plan to shut them up in a limited inclosure and feed them to the limit for about two weeks, selling them as soon as possible after this. In many markets the heavier a goose weighs the more it brings per pound. So it is an object to make them as heavy as possible.

CONCRETE FOUNTAIN IS BEST

Will Produce an Everlasting Article and One That Will Give Excellent Satisfaction.

While many similar fountains for the poultry have been made of tin cans, that soon rust and are useless, yet this same principle applied to a concrete fountain will produce an everlasting article and one that will give excellent satisfaction. A large flat dish is used to mold the bottom, into this lay a one-inch course of concrete and have it come up on the sides, as shown in sectional illustration, about two inches high. In the center set a short section of stove pipe and inside this place a smaller piece that has a less diameter so that the wall of the tank will have a thickness of at least three-quarters of an inch all around the same; for the center core an old tomato can or even a round piece of wood of the right size is excellent. The holes for the water are made by inserting a large spike about one-half inch from the bottom, through the outer core or section of stovepipe and so it will mold a small hole through the concrete; four or six of these should be made, but placed below the top edge of inside dish. The concrete is placed between the stovepipe and the core, thus molding the wall and bonding with the concrete bottom so the fountain is all in one piece. When dry the forms may be easily removed and you have an article that will give good satisfaction, keeping the water clean, with just enough in the lower basin for the poultry; something they cannot tip over and spill, the supply for the day being placed in at the top of the tank.

The Best Kind Of Life Insurance

is health insurance. The best way to insure the health of your family when any member gets in a "run-down" condition, is to use a tonic that removes the cause of the ill-health. Such a tonic is

DR. D. JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE

A "run down" condition is generally due to the failure of the digestive organs to properly digest the food. Dr. D. Jayne's Vermifuge tones up the digestive organs so that they supply the body with proper nourishment, and in this way bring about lasting health. Ordinary tonics simply supply food material in predigested form, and consequently are only effective as long as the tonic is taken.

Sold by all Druggists—two sizes, 50c and 35c.

Dr. D. Jayne's Expectorant has been relieving and curing Coughs, Colds, and similar ailments for nearly four generations.

Photographic Detective.

A scientific organization in France has employed an ingenious device to test the alleged power of a young woman to tell the contents of unopened boxes. The committee, appointed by the organization to make the test, took a photographic plate and exposed it in a camera as if for an ordinary picture. Then the plate was cut in two, and one-half of it, carefully protected from the light, was enclosed with other objects in a sealed box. After the young woman had described the contents of the box the committee developed the two halves of the plate. That which was in the box was "fogged," showing that it had been exposed to light, while the other half developed a perfectly clear picture.

Deaf Hear at Telephone.

Among the many curiosities of the telephone and one which certainly never was thought of when the instrument was invented, is the fact that persons who are extremely deaf often can hear perfectly over the telephone. Those who are so deaf that they can distinguish nothing which is said to them except by the motion of the lips or by the use of an ear trumpet or other similar device can carry on long distance telephone conversations with perfect ease and never miss a word.

Mountain of Alum.

One of the recently discovered natural curiosities of China is an "alum mountain" 1,900 feet in height and about ten miles in circumference at the base. The Chinese quarry the alum, or masses containing alum, in large blocks, which are heated in ovens made for the purpose, and afterward dissolved in boiling water.

The alum then crystallizes in layers about half a foot in thickness and is cut up into ten pound pieces. Its principal use is in the purification of water.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Bessemer, Ala., May 24, 1910

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space in the dear old Banner to say a few words. Oh! how lonesome we Bessemer and Fossie people feel since Miss Jewel Robinson and Miss Mollie Wagoner have left us. Miss Robinson of Elmore has visited relatives and friends in Bessemer for the past six weeks, and has gained many friends while on her trip, and oh, how we miss her, but hope she will come back to see us again. I guess Mr Hocut and Mr. Stick will feel some what lonesome without Miss Robinson and Miss Wagoner. Miss Roberta Wagoner looks awful lonesome but guess Mr. Pylant and Mr. Bonler will keep her company until her sister returns as I am sure she want stay long as she can't stay away from Bessemer.

BLUE EYES.

Argenta, Ark., May 22, 1910.

Editor Banner:—Will you give me space for a few lines in your paper to express to my friends some of the sights I have seen in Arkansas. I spent the day in Hot Springs, the 14th. While I was there I visited the alligator farm and the ostrich farm; it is something great, to be seen. I also saw the hot water spring and visited the bath houses. Little Rock is a booming city. The Elks held their convention the 19th and there were delegates from every city in the state. The best decorated automobile was decorated with sweet peas. Hope Arkansas won the prize. I went out for a drive and I saw as pretty crops as I have seen for the time of year. Arkansas is as healthy as Alabama, or at leat Argenta and Little Rock are. And there is not any more sickness on the farms than there is in Alabama, and any one can make good money here at work. Wishing you all a prosperous year.

MRS. J. P. RASBERRY.
(formerly Hattie Sears.)

Popwell School House.

Editor Banner:—Please give me a small space in your paper to say a few words. Health of this community is fairly good. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely, while it is not as good as we want to make it. We want to urge and request the older people to come out and be with us.

Miss Oda Traywick and Mr. Mathews Roper visited Mt. Nebo's Sunday school Sunday last and report an excellent time.

Messers L. A. and E. C. Popwell visited our Sunday school Sunday last.

We want everybody to come out Saturday night, May 28th, and be with us in our debating society for we boys are going to display our oratory in the old way and all who stay at home will miss what is coming to them. We want to tell the subject and speakers. The subject is good and the speakers are excellent and will give the subject justice, so come everybody and be with us.

The singing at Mr. William Traywicks Sunday night was attended by a large crowd and Miss Belle Mims was organist. Come again, Miss Belle, we are always glad to have you with us.

Messrs. Sam and Henry Miller, Ben Wells and Newt Miner, and Misses Lillian, Annie Mae and Sallie Belle Driver and Miss Julissa Wells attended the singing at Mr. Traywicks last Sunday night and reported a nice time.

Say, what has become of the Busy Bee of Pine Dale, I guess she has gone to a new gum. I will close wishing the Banner and its readers much success.

BLUE EYED GIRL.

Cane Creek

Editor Banner:—Please give me space in your columns to say a few words in regard to the S. S. Convention held at Cane Creek.

The hopse called to order by President N. J. Calloway. First, the roll called; seven S. S. were represented, of which six are evergreen.

Next was an address by Dr. Horn, which was carefully arranged and effectively delivered. Then an excellent sermon by Rev. T. J. Deason. Then dinner in great quanities was served and enjoyed by all. Then Judge L. H. Reynolds made an interesting and helpful speech on S. S. helps. Then Prof. T. E Williams dealt farely with the discussion of the Teachers Training Course. Then Bro. J. W. Murphy made brief but inspiring speech on A S. S. Vision. Then we were delightfully intertained by Prof R. A. Smith on Relation of S. S. to Church work.

In Memoriam.

On May 19th the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Heflin and took from their midst the loving spirit of their little daughter, Mabel. It is so hard to give her up, but God knows best, so weep not, papa and mama, for our loss is heaven's gain. Look up and find consolation which God by His Spirit can give through faith, the rich manifestation. Your sweet child still lives, it's with the Lord and angels now and can never die. It cannot come to you, but you can go to it where you will never part again.

WITH FOREFATHERS EDWARD VII RESTS

Millions Witness the Funeral Pageant of Monarch.

Edward the Peacemaker was laid to rest Friday in the tomb of his forefathers at Windsor, while all the world gave homage to his memory. Nine kings with bent heads followed the casket afoot through the streets of London, through a lane of 55,000 troops bowed upon their arms.

Princes of Royal Blood.

Following the kings were princes of royal blood gathered from all parts of the world and special envoys appointed by the great republics to participate in the most imposing funeral ceremonial the world has ever seen. Among these latter was Theodore Roosevelt, special ambassador from the United States. Along the route of the funeral procession from Westminster to Paddington station, where the remains were borne on a gun carriage, fully 5,000 persons were banked behind the troops. Sorrow lay over them, and yet, rising dominantly, was a spiritless reverence, but quite human, the spirit that hailed the new ruler, George V, son of the monarch they mourned, as his father was borne to his eternal peace.

Sun Shone Brightly.

A bright sun shone down on the splendid procession. A thunder storm and heavy rain that had ushered in the day gave way before the bright rays and from the spectacular standpoint conditions were the best that could be desired for the ceremony.

Amid the sweep of troops and the march of potentates there was one figure whose appearance set the heart of every spectator throbbing with sympathy. It was that of Queen Alexandra, brave under the blow that almost felled her. As the good queen, no whit less revered than her consort, was drawn through the human lanes, men and women wept.

Kitchener and Roosevelt.

The lions of the occasion were Lord Kitchener and Theodore Roosevelt, with the kaiser a close third.

"There's Teddy!" was the cry set up as the ex-president passed and the throngs saw him through the open windows of the closed royal carriage, which was gorgeously gilded and manned by uniformed coachmen and footmen. More interest was shown in America's envoy than in the new king, who seemed worn and troubled. Only the solemnity of the occasion prevented volleys of cheers from greeting Mr Roosevelt. He alone, as a civilian, raised his hat in passing the draped standards, all the others in the procession giving the military salute.

Last Sad Rites.

Throughout the ceremony, the troops lining the way from the station to St. Georges chapel maintained rigidly the military arrangements. The ceremony was brief. A last prayer was said, and while music still echoed through the chapel the members of the family gathered around the coffin. The central figure was Alexandra. On one side was Princess Victoria, on the other, within reach of her hand, stood King George. As the last solemn word was said the queen mother spasmodically clutched Victoria's arm. Then the remains were placed in the vault and the obsequies over Edward came to an end with prayer and the soaring death music for the king of England.

Flowers Worth $250,000.

About the chapel at Windsor was banked but a portion of the floral tributes. All told, 25 tons of flowers were sent, their value exceeding $250,000.

BELIEVES HE IS RIGHT.

Episcopal Minister Prefers Limited License to Total Prohibition.

The Rev. William A. Wasson, it is said, has resigned from his Episcopal pastorate at Riverhead, Long Island, to work for the limited license as against total prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors.

In a letter to the Right Rev. Frederick Burgess, D. D., bishop of Long Island, Dr. Wasson says he wishes to give his whole time to "fighting temperance falsely so-called, and advocating the true temperance, which means moderation and self control."

A FAMOUS CLAIM.

Heirs of George Washington May Receive $300,000.

Washington.—A famous claim against the government in which the heirs of George Washington would receive $305,000, may be settled by the action of the house committee on private land claims, which is expected to report favorably to the house a bill to that effect. There are several heirs of Washington who combined in making the claim, which has been pending through several congresses.

George Washington was entitled, under the Virginia law, to some 23,000 acres of land as a recompense for his military services, but he declined to accept it, and took, instead, warrants for 3,050 acres of land in Ohio. This tract was located in the northwestern reserve, in what is known as the "Virginia military lands."

It was claimed that Washington paid the taxes on the land up until the time of his death, and that his administrators paid it until 1807. If the expected action is taken by the committee and approved by congress, the government will allow the heirs $305,000 in gold in lieu of the land. None of the heirs are wealthy, and some of them are poor, it is stated.

Lawrence Washington, a descendant of the family of the first president, made the principal argument before the committee in favor of the claim.

HEAVY BURDEN ON PEOPLE OF COUNTRY

Sensational Speech by Foss on the Tariff.

Washington.—Representative Eugene N. Foss, the newly-elected democratic representative from Massachusetts, a former republican and a leading manufacturer, signalized his beginning of active participation in the house with a sensationally radical attack upon the Payne-Aldrich tariff. He denounced the republican policy of protection as an unmitigated evil, flayed the republican leaders, declared the recent revision of the tariff to be "a deliberate bunco game from start to finish," pronounced in favor of reciprocity and demanded an "extra session of a new congress" at the earliest opportunity to revise the tariff.

"The people are indeed demanding protection," said Mr. Foss, "but the protection they are demanding is protection from the Payne-Aldrich tariff."

The speaker announced himself as favoring the creation of a tariff commission, but he wanted the commission composed of non-partisan men, whose report would be made direct to congress rather than to the president.

$10,000 FOR PRINCETON.

Large Bequest by Will of Isaac C. Wyman, of Salem, Mass.

By the will of Isaac C. Wyman, of Salem, filed in the probate court, the bulk of his estate, which is estimated at nearly $10,000,000, is left to the graduate school of Princeton university as a memorial of Mr. Wyman's "lasting affection," as the will phrases it, for his alma mater.

John M. Raymond, of Salem, and Dean Andrew West, of the Princeton Graduate school, named as trustees, are given almost absolute power in disposing of the property, which consists largely of real estate holdings.

Mr. Wyman died here at the age of 82. The will also directs that the trustees erect a chapel as a memorial to Mr. Wyman's parents. The chapel is to be large enough to hold "neighborhood meetings of Sunday school classes."

FRIGHTFUL HAVOC IN BIG EXPLOSION

Over Hundred People Killed at Pinar del Rio.

Two almost instantaneous explosions of dynamite, supposed to consist of 3,000 pounds, has completely demolished the rural guard barracks in the city of Pinar del Rio, according to reports received from Havana, Cuba. Fully 100 persons were killed and many were wounded.

Most of the dead were rural guards, but the entire families of several of the officers of the rural guard, it is reported, were killed also, as well as several employees of the public works department and residents of the city, on which fell a deluge of masonry and debris from the blown-up building.

Accident or Act of Conspirators.

It is not known yet whether the explosion was the result of an accident or was due to an act of conspirators, but the former hypothesis is considered the more probable.

The barracks was a massive building of Spanish construction and occupied a site on the outskirts of the city to the north. During the late intervention it was the headquarters of Colonel Parker's regiment, the eleventh cavalry. Adjacent to the barracks was a long row of officers' quarters. Recently the barracks was occupied by the public works department and four troops of rural cavalry.

All Dynamite Ordered to Barracks.

In consequence of the alarm over race disturbances, the government ordered all deposits of dynamite in the vicinity in the possession of contractors for road construction and other public work, to be removed to the barracks for safe-keeping. Wednesday the work of removing the dynamite from the barracks for shipment to the government magazines in Havana was begun by employees of the public works department, assisted by rural guards.

They were engaged in loading cases of the dynamite on wagons when a terrific explosion occurred instantly followed by another, strewing the central court in which the work was going on with dead and wounded.

Victims Hurled Mile Away.

According to reports received here the mangled remains of victims were found in the streets of the city a mile from the scene of the explosion.

EXPLOSION KILLS THIRTY.

Seven Big Boilers Burst With Awful Results at Canton, O.

With a roar that was heard miles away, a battery of seven boilers at the plant of the American Sheet and Tinplate Company exploded, killing probably thirty men and injuring about fifty. Among the injured are a half dozen who, it is said, probably will die.

The cause of the explosion is unknown. The fireman and engineer, who were in the boiler room, are dead. No one else at the plant who survived the accident can give an explanation. One workman says he heard three distinct explosions in quick succession. The force of the concussion was terrific. The big plant is in such a state of ruin as to be practically a total loss. A mere egg shell of the building is left. Identification of the men was difficult, because many of them were so mutilated that even the most intimate friends of the dead could not recognize the features.

Heads were blown from several bodies. Arms and legs were torn from the trunks. Fragments of bodies were blown several squares from the scene and bits of human flesh have been picked up on porches and roofs of houses and in trees.

Peter Anderson, a bright little fellow of eight years, has cleared himself and a six-year-old companion of a larceny charge by explaining to a judge in Jersey City that he caught a roll of bills on a fish hook while angling in the Hackensack river recently. There was $42 in the roll, which was held together by a rubber band. The boys divided it equally.

A boatman, who had lost the money, had the lads arrested, but the court gave credence to the story of the strange manner in which the monty was found, and dismissed the complaint when the boys said they had no idea who had lost the money.

He said he found all the scales tampered with.

SIMPLE LANGUAGE FOR ALL

Ready Made Tongues Are Doomed to Die—Short Life If Latest Invention Will Hold.

Albany, N. Y.—If the inventors and promoters of so-called "universal languages" continue their activities, artificial languages will at last be nearly as numerous as those of natural growth.

Quite a number of years ago the idea that it might be possible to construct a simple language that could be made readily available for communication among all nations was launched in the jargon that was known as Volapuk. For that, all the good things were claimed that have since been claimed for its various successors. For a time it had limited vogue. A few enthusiasts devoted themselves to the study of it and held meetings at which it alone was spoken. Then it gradually passed into the limbo of forgotten things.

Next Esperanto was brought out with assurances that it was the real thing. Then came Ido, another artificial language said to be perfection's self. The latest addition to the list is called Ido. There may have been others, but we do not now recall them.

All these ready made languages have this feature in common, that they look like what is called "hog Latin," and sound like it when one tries to speak the words. The words are constructed mostly from Latin roots, with a few conveniently adaptable Anglo-Saxon ones mixed in. Their "simplicity" is in the use of a large variety of terminations to denote gender and number in the case of verbs.

That no artificial language will ever become useful for any kind of intercourse among the people of the different countries, is a foregone conclusion. Only a live one can become universal. An artificial language is still born, and it is as impossible to galvanize it into life as it would be to revive and bring back into use one of the dead languages.

Unless all signs fail, there is just one live language that is destined to become the universal medium of business intercourse, and that one is English.

He spends 20 minutes looking for a stick.

He spends ten more wondering if it is the right stick.

When he has finally decided he advances to the carpet and hauls off—

Yes, he hauls off and looks to see if there are any boys on the alley fence watching him.

Then he wonders why his father didn't beat the carpet and let him go fishing.

Then he spits on his hands and wonders what time it is.

Then he thinks he hears another boy in the alley and he goes to the fence to see.

When he returns he wonders why carpets have to be beaten, but seeing his mother in the back door he picks up the stick and gives a whack that would surely break the leg of a fly. It tires him.

Whack! Whack! Whack!

His wrist aches. His shoulder aches. He has certainly sprained his back.

Two more feeble whacks and then he drops his stick and sits down with his head in his hands.

"What's the matter, Jimmie?" asks the mother, as she comes out.

"It's my—my heart!"

"Why, you poor boy! I'd forgotten all about your weak heart. Run away and play shinny and climb trees and kick football and I'll beat the carpet myself!"

FATAL FLAW IN HIS THEORY

Dr. Gulick's Arguments for Matrimonial Felicity Overturned by Application of Logic.

When Dr. Luther H. Gulick, of certain honorable connection with the Russell Sage foundation, allows himself to speculate fondly on the possible domestic felicities which might result from the adoption of a masculine style of dress buttoning up the back instead of the front, he forgets an important particular. That relates to the time when it required more than the services of what is known now to wives as a "kind hooker" to get the head of the family into his togs—when a couple of squires, an armorer, a tinsmith and a blacksmith or two were needed to equip the business man for his day's work, with the fair wife on the side to get the helmet on straight and to strap the loved one's sword about his manly waist.

Dr. Gulick will be sensible of his own confusion when he recalls that this co-operation did not make for the perfect domestic tranquillity so much to be desired in perfectly respectable communities. He will admit he was in error in his theory that if the husband were as dependent on the wife in the matter of hooks as the wife is dependent on him—or maid or neighbor—there would be fewer divorces.

Birthplace of a Great Musician.

Seven cities contend for the honor of being the birthplace of Homer, and several towns in Italy claim the right from his association with them of commemorating Guido Monico, or Guido d'Arezzo, as he is more commonly known. The little town of Talla, near Carentino, has set up a monument to mark his birthplace, but it is doubtful if the claim can be substantiated against the claim of Arezzo. It is generally conceded that Guido was a Benedictine monk, and that he was a great writer on music of the eleventh century. The claim is set up that he was born near Paris, and migrated to Arezzo. He wrote the "Micrologus," but Grove discards many of the pretensions which have been formulated concerning Guido's achievements. It appears, says Grove, that Guido invented the principle upon which the construction of the stave is based and the F and C clefs, but that he did not invent the complete four-lined stave itself.

PLANNING FOR FARM COURSES

Leaders in University of Illinois Announce Scheme to Improve Rural Conditions.

Chicago.—An undertaking which is expected to work a wonderful improvement in the condition of rural life in this state, is announced by the University of Illinois. The plan is to introduce agriculture as a study in the rural schools of the state, where the farmer boy in general acquires about all the education he receives before he grows to manhood.

As the first step, Prof. Fred L. Charles of the state university at Urbana has sent out a call for a conference to be held at the state college of agriculture on March 24, 25 and 26.

"At this season of the year," Prof. Charles said, "many teachers are asking for assistance, administrative officers are requesting materials, bulletins, aid in planning experimental plots, etc. The state normal school, farmers' institutes, rural school directors, educational and agricultural journals and other important agencies are all working upon the problem in its various phases. There is felt a need, however, for closer co-operation, and this conference will do much to unify these forces and to formulate definite steps in advance.

"As it is intended to bring together at this time only the more active workers, the sessions will be confined to the treatment of practical concrete topics. Five sessions will be held; formal papers will be brief, assuring amplest opportunity for round-table discussion. It is hoped that school authorities will recognize the importance of this gathering and make it possible for interested teachers to attend without expense."

It is believed that the conference will arouse general interest throughout the state and will result in much practical good.

BEATS SHERIFF TO PRISON

Convicted Ohio Forger Goes Alone to Penitentiary, Arriving Ahead of Official.

Columbus, O.—Charles B. Quinn, who is an inmate of the penitentiary, is an exception to the general rule of persons sent to that institution. Quinn was convicted of forgery in Clark county and by a ruling the supreme court confirmed a sentence of one year.

Since the action of the trial court Quinn moved to Cleveland, where he was engaged in the real estate business. As soon as he learned of the receipt of the mandate of the supreme court by the courts of Clark county he wired the sheriff at Springfield to meet him at the Nell house in this city, as he was ready to surrender himself and begin his sentence.

Quinn went to the hotel, and, not finding the sheriff, made a visit to the penitentiary. Finding that the sheriff had not arrived there, Quinn went back to the city and hunted up the sheriff and with his assistance had himself committed to the prison.

BITTER DOG FIGHT IN COURT

Sheep-Killing Canine Attacks Farmer's Pet in Court—Woman Retains Her Dog.

Ovid, Mich.—A justice court was thrown into a panic by a dog fight the other day during the hearing of a law case. Mrs. Mae Cameron was on trial on the charge of harboring a sheep-killing dog. She formerly owned two dogs whose particular delight, it is alleged, was to raid flocks of sheep. John Holland suffered the loss of nine sheep killed and several injured. Other farmers also suffered losses. Mrs. Cameron finally put one of the dogs to death, but refused to kill the other.

Complaint was made and she was arrested and haled into court. She brought the dog into court with her. One of the numerous interested spectators also brought along his dog. The two dogs met and were soon mixed up in a chewing contest. Women screamed and rushed for the door, while men wrestled with the canine combatants to pull them apart.

The dogs separated and the hearing proceeded. Mrs. Cameron was adjudged guilty and taxed $28.40. At last accounts she still had her dog.

He Was Prepared.

Blanche Ring, the actress, is always preaching caution—whether she practices it or not is as Kipling says, another story. "If everyone was only as cautious as a man I once knew," she said the other night, "nobody would ever go broke. He called at the money-order window of the local post office and asked permission to send an order for $100 to the 'old country.' Then the man with the money gave his own name as payee.

"'I'm going over next week,' he volunteered, 'and I want to have the money waiting for me on the other side, so that I can give it to my mother.'

"'Why don't you take it with you?' asked the clerk. 'You would save 40 cents.'

"'Well, suppose the ship sinks and I drown?'"—Young's Magazine.

Do You Have Headache

TAKE ONE OF THESE LITTLE TABLETS AND THE PAIN IS GONE.

"My first experience with Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills was a sample package handed me. They relieved the pain so promptly that I have never been without them since. I have given them to many friends when they had headache and they never failed to relieve them. I have suffered with neuralgia in my head, and the first one I took relieved me. They have cured me of neuralgia. I would not be without them."

Cured of severe compound cold and cough by

Vinol

"From Dec. 20, '08, to March 1, '09, I had three bad colds, one on top of the other. I got so weak I could hardly get around. Nothing seemed to help me until I began to take Vinol. The change was magic. Three bottles completely fixed that compound cold and stopped the terrible cough and what surprises me most, at the same time it cured me of a severe stomach trouble that has bothered me for 20 years. Vinol is certainly a wonderful medicine."

Mr Toppan is one of Lynn's most prominent and highly respected merchants, whose word is as good as his bond.

The reason Vinol is so successful in such cases is because it contains the two most world-famed tonics—the medicinal strength-creating, body-building elements of Cod Liver Oil and Peptonic Iron.

Wars of the United States.

The 13 wars in which the United States has engaged are as follows: 1. War of the Revolution, seven years, 1775-1782. 2 Indian war in Ohio territory, 1790. 3 War with the Barbary states, 1803-1804. 4. Tecumseh Indian war, 1811. 5 War with Great Britain, three years, 1812-1815. 6. Algerine war, 1815. 7. First Seminole war, 1817. 8. Black Hawk war, 1832. 9 Second Seminole war, 1845. 10 Mexican war, two years, 1846-1848. 11. Mormon war, 1856. 12 Civil war, four years, 1861-1865. 13. Spanish war, April 21 to July 26, 1898.

Aged Deans.

Our cathedrals now possess many deans who have reached an extreme and, in most cases, a vigorous old age, says London Tit-Bits. St. Paul's has a nonagenarian; York, Durham, Exeter, and Llandaff have octogenarians; while Canterbury, Lincoln, Chester, Ripon, Salisbury, Carlisle, Wells, Hresford, Bristol, Gloucester, Rochester, and Windsor have septuagenarians. Thus 17 of our deans are upwards of 70 years of age, and the recently-deceased deans of Lichfield, Worcester, and Norwich would have increased the number to 20.

Woe of a Large Family.

"I belong to a family of 16," said the southern woman. "Three children by my father's first wife, 13 by his last. I am one of the last of the 13, but that isn't what I'm going to tell you. We've been scattered to the four winds for years, and the other day I got a letter from a sister in Louisville, Ky., telling me that my sister in Chicago had been very ill. 'Write to her,' she wrote me. Now, how can I? You may think it queer, but I haven't the slightest idea what my Chicago sister's married name is."

Refrigerating Plants on Ships.

During the season of navigation of 1908 there were 46 steamers fitted with mechanical refrigerating plants sailing from the port of Montreal, with a combined cold storage space of 3,105,556 cubic feet, and, counting the total number of trips made by these steamers in the season, they rendered available a total cold storage space of 4,907,195 cubic feet. In addition, 19 steamers with cooled-air accommodation of 204,780 cubic feet were in commission.

Awakening of the East.

After centuries the near east is in the world's race for growth and progress. Port Said, 50 years ago a small Arab camp, now has a population of 50,000. From one hut, in 1830, Piraeus has grown to 80,000, Mersine, not in existence when Ibrahim Pasha anchored his fleet where it now stands, has 22,000; Beirut has multiplied 6,000 inhabitants into 150,000. Gaza increased from 2,000 in 1840, with small growth till 1887, to 48,000 in 1907.

Breaking Wind Force.

The effect of buildings in lessening wind force is shown by Berlin records. In 1884 an anemometer was placed on a tower in the open country at a height of about 105 feet, and in 1908 this was surrounded by buildings about 175 feet high. The mean velocity of the wind, as shown by the instrument, was reduced from about 18 feet per second in the five-year period of 1884-88 to 12 feet in 1899-1908.

CIRCUIT COURT.

On Thursday morning of last week the Grand Jury made their final report and were discharged.

On Friday morning there was a full attendance in court at the trial of the four negroes for the murder of Cleve Houlditch at Maplesville.

The evidence was all so clear and strong that it did not take the jury long to come to a decision.

Emma Smith was first tried and sentenced to the penitentiary for life.

Wiley Young, Alice Sheppard and William McCary were then tried and Wiley Young was sentenced to be hanged on June 20, 1910. Judge Pearson pronounced the fatal sentence in a most impressive manner, the effect of which was noticeable in the audience.

Alice Sheppard was sentenced to imprisionment for life, and William McCary was acquitted.

The business of the session being concluded court adjourned Saturmorning.

Report of Grand Jury.

To Honorable W. W. Pearson, Judge presiding.

We, the Grand Jury organized at the Spring Term, 1910 of the Circuit Court of Chilton County, Alabama, having finished our labors, beg lieve to submit this our final report.

We have carefully investigated all indictable offences so far as possible, and have returned truebills when, in our judgment the facts have justified it. We have investigated forty-four cases, examined one hundred and ninety three witnesses, and returned nineteen indictments. We have made diligent enquiry into violations of prohibition laws in this county, and while a great many cases have been brought to our attention, we have found it impossible to secure sufficient testimony to justify indictments. We do not believe these laws can be enforced unless the good citizens of this county will do their duty. As we find upon examination of most of the witnesses brought before us will not testify as to having bought it; and unless the good citizens will take the necessary steps to bring the offenders to justice the violations will, continue.

We further find that the majority of these witnesses are boys and young men and we have reason to believe that a great many of them have sworn falsely.

We also find that the churches in the rural districts are having considerable trouble on account of unbecoming conduct on the part of young men especially, and in some cases the Grand Jury have acted within the powers confered upon it by law.

The Justices of the Peace of the county who have reported to us have complied with the requirements of the law.

We have examined by committee the Poor House of the County, and find it well kept and in good condition. There are twelve inmates three males and nine females. The sanitary conditions are good, and we find all the inmates to be well pleased with their Superintendent. We would recommend that the County provide more room for the care of stock and produce, raised on the farm.

We have examined the books of all the County officers and find them to be neat and correctly kept. We have examined the bonds of all the County officers and find them to be good and sufficient.

We have examined the Sheriff's feed account with the State and find it correct.

We have examined the books and accounts of the County Treasurer, see Exhibit "A".

We have examined the Court House and Jail in a body. We find the court house in good condition with the following exceptions: We find the court room is in bad condition as regards the floor, and we would suggest that the Commissioners provide a sufficient number of cuspidors for this room, and we would further suggest that the officials of the county see that they are put to the proper use. We also find that the toilet room on the first floor of the court house is in bad condition and would suggest that the officials put it in good sanitary condition and see that it is properly cleaned daily. We also find that the court house roof leaks over the Judge's chamber and beg leave to call the Commissioners attention to having this repaired promptly.

We found the jail in good shape so far as safety is concerned. We would recommend that the two small rooms in the first story of the jail be cleaned out and provided with the necessary sanitary connections. We notice that the former Grand Jury called the attention of the Commissioners to this fact. We also find that these rooms have been badly needed during the last two weeks, and we believe that it would be greatly to the good of the county if this work could be done at once. We also find that the beds and bedding of the inmates of the jail is in bad condition and would like to suggest to the proper officials the importance of supplying and keeping supplied clean beds and clothing for all the inmates. We would further suggest that the County Commissioners visit the jail as soon as possible and provide all things necessary for the comfort and protedtion of the prisoners. We would also recommend that the Sheriff make proper requistion in writing the County Commissioners for what supplies they need at any time. Some complaint was made was made to us by the prisoners in the jail to the effect that they were no properly fed. We would suggest to the Sheriff that he look after this more closely.

We have made diligent enquiry in to the condition of the public roads of the county and find them bad. We also find that the overseers an apportioners are negligent as to their duty along this line. We beg leave to call the attention of the overseers to the fact that they are required under the law to put, at least ten days work on their respective roads.

We the Grand Jury unanimously endorse the proposition of a bond issue for the improvement of the roads of the County, and would suggest for the proposition be put before the people at the general election in November, 1910.

We desire to thank the sheriff and his deputies for their prompt service of all papers put in their hands. We also thank our bailiff for his polite attention and constant care for our convenience. We also desire to thank all other county officials for their many courtesies. We especially desire to thank our county Solicitor for the assistance given us in our deliberations and for his careful attention to the details of every question that was presented for his opinion. We desire to thank your honor for the able and instructive charge given us before entering upon the discharge of our duties, and now having finished our labors, we ask to be finally discharged.

Respectfully submitted,
E. L. THORNTON, Foreman.

We respectfully recommend to to the county Commissioner that they reimburse the sheriff to the amount of ten ($10.00) dollars for the feeding of witnesses necessarily held by him during the investigation by us of the killing of Cleve Houlditch at Maplesville, provided there is a warrant of law for such action.

We further recommend that the county Treasurer be provided with office room in the court house.

E. L. THORNTON, Foreman.

Collars of Honor.

In France the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals decorates dogs that have distinguished themselves by deeds of bravery with a tastefully designed "collar of honor."

Among the animals decorated in this way one of the most celebrated is Nasshus, a large bulldog, whose specialty is to stop runaway horses by jumping up and seizing them by the bridle. It is calculated that this intelligent animal has already saved the lives of eight persons, if not more.

Pautland, a Great Dane, received a collar for saving his mistress from the attack of a footpad, and Turk, a splendid Newfoundland, has had similar honors for rescuing young children from drowning on several occasions.—The Sunday Magazine.

Carlyle's Appreciation.

The inscription on Mrs. Carlyle's tomb was written by her famous husband, and proves what gratitude he felt for her loving care and attention. "In her bright existence she had more sorrows than are common, but also a soft invincibility, a capacity of discernment, and a noble loyalty of heart which are rare. For 40 years she was the true and loving helpmate of her husband, and by act and word unweariedly forwarded him as none else could in all of worth that he did or attempted. She died at London, April 21, 1866, suddenly, snatched away from him, and the light of his life is as if gone out."

Enthusiasm Extraordinary.

Many Chinamen were wrought up to a high state of enthusiasm by the provincial assemblies opened last December throughout the empire. One native schoolmaster was especially fervent. To express his feelings he chopped off one of his fingers and with the stump wrote out eight characters shewing his hearty approval. He brought this testimony to the delegates from his district, in bidding them farewell.

ALL DRUGGISTS

New Orleans is Logical Point For Exposition.

Clanton Bank, Clanton, Alabama.

Gentlemen:—Referring to the letter to you from the New Orleans Clearing House Association, asking your assistance in having New Orleans designated as the logical point for holding the World's Panama Exposition, I, too, wish to ask for your kind co-operation in this matter.

Over sixty million of people live within a radius of 1000 miles from New Orleans, while in the same radius from San Francisco there are only six million people.

The average railroad fare to New Orleans for over 75% of the people of this country to visit an Exposition here will be $12.50, as against $37.50 to San Francisco.

It is proposed, because of the importance of the Panama canal to the Central and South American republics, to extend special invitations to those governments to participate, and to the people of those nations to visit this exposition. For them New Orleans is the only logical point. Even if an exposition were held in San Francisco, these people would pass through New Orleans to get there. They can come to New Orleans via water in two weeks less time than it will require for them to reach San Francisco.

The people of your state could come to an exposition in New Orleans in much less time, and at much less expense, than they could go to San Francisco, and here is a point which you, as bankers, will readily see the force of.

If this exposition is held in New Orleans, the millions of dollars which will be expended in the construction and maintenance of the great enterprise, and the millions of dollars which will be here expended be the hundreds of thousands of people from all parts of the world, will unquestionably remain in the Mississippi valley and in the south and, during its idle period, this immense amount of capital will find its way back to the banks of the North and East.

If this exposition goes to San Francisco, these millions of dollars will stay on the Pacific coast, and not one state east of the Rocky Mountains will receive any benefit therefrom.

Senator John H. Bankhead and Representative L. Thos. Heflin of your State are members of the committees which will settle this important matter and I beg of you to communicate with both of them by wire or letter in behalf of New Orleans and the South.

Sincerely yours,
J. G. SANDERS,
Governor of Louisiana.

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3.50 just for filling this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this:

Judge Reynolds Replies to Mr. Mahan.

Editor Banner:—On May 12th, 1910, a letter appeared against me in your paper signed by one Mr. J. M. Mahan. I do not know whether Mr. Mahan is employed by the job or by the year, but he writes against me one week in the Union and the next week in the Banner.

I enclose a copy of letter which I wrote Judge Brewer about the Littleton case, also his answer which is self explanatory.

Clanton, Ala., May 10, 1910.

Hon. S. L. Brewer,
Tuskegee, Ala.

Dear sir:—I am handing you herewith a letter which was published in the Banner of last week.

You will recollect this case was tried before you and the facts of my connection with the case are as follows:

During the trial of Mr. Littleton, Solicitor Bowling sent for me and placed me upon the stand as a witness. I testified to the fact of a young man coming to me and wanting to plead guilty to the charge of disturbing religious worship; that I was positive to the young man coming to me relative to such a charge, but that I could not state positively that Mr. Littleton was the man. But I did state that Mr. Littleton resembled the man. After the case had been submitted to the jury I went to you and told you that I had investigated the matter and had been convinced that Mr. Littleton was not the party who came to me, and told you that I was afraid my testimony would prejudice the cause of Mr. Littleton; thereupon you told me that Littleton was guilty regardless of my testimony, and requested that we wait and see what the jury did. The jury found him guilty. I then went to you, you will remember and told you that I was dissatisfied and asked you to give Mr Littleton a new trial immediately. You agreed to do this. Then Mr. Curry who represented Mr. Littleton said that a number of their witnesses had left town. I then insisted that Mr. Littleton have a new trial and his case be continued until the next term of court. You then consented to do this, and finally Mr. Curry, after a conference with his client, stated that if you would remit the fine, that they would pay the costs and dispose of the matter finally, and this you did as requested by Mr. Curry.

You will readily see that the enclosed published letter does me a great injustice, and, if the foregoing facts of the case are in accord with your recollections, I would thank you very much to write me a letter stating the facts as above, in order that I may have your answer published at the time I make answer to the enclosed letter.

Thanking you in advance, and assuring you of my best wishes, I remain, Yours respectfully,

L. H. REYNOLDS.

Atlanta, Ga., May 19, 1910.

Judge L. H. Reynolds,
Clanton, Ala.

My dear Judge;—Yours received and noted.

Mrs. Brewer is in very bad health and I am here seeking relief for her.

Am sorry that you are pursued by one who doubtless has another motive than the good of an 'orphan boy.' There are so many cases that I do not remember at all. I do not remember the facts about the one you mention. I am sure your statement is correct and you ought not to suffer from such an attack: its likely you'll receive more benefit than harm. With all good wishes, Yours sincerely,

S. L. BREWER.

I was in hopes we could have a pleasant campaign without any mud slinging, but any one that will read Mr. Mahan's letters can readily see the intention that he has in writing them. One time he objects to me because I voted for the "Amendment" and the next time because Mr. Littleton had to pay the costs of court. He misstates the facts about the Littleton case when he says that I testified that Mr. Littleton plead guilty in my court to disturbing religious worship. I never did testify to any such thing but I did testify that a young man came into my court and wanted to plead guilty to disturbing religious worship and that he related the same circumstance and at the identical time.

Any one to read Mr. Mahan's letter can readily see that it is false, because if I had testified that Mr. Littleton had plead guilty in my court he could not have legally have been tried in another court for the same offense.

Again he refers to my failing to make good any neglect of an official duty of mine or my clerks. Any person who knows anything at all knows that when I am summoned to court to give testimony that it is as an individual and not as an official.

On May 9, 1910 two gentlemen came to me and presented me with a bill for $68.87, the costs in the Littleton case, and said if I would pay this amount Mr. Mahan would support me in the coming primary. This I refused to do, and soon afterwards Mr. Mahan in company with a pretended Republican was seen going to a certain office and the third party began writing on his machine, and Mr. Mahan's article appeared in the following issue of the paper.

I hope it will not be necessary for me to write any more before the election, and I sincerely hope after the Republicans have nominated their ticket that they will stand together as they have stood in the past and elect it in November.

There is a great deal being said about who will stand by the party and if you will wait you will see.

Respectfully,

L. H. REYNOLDS.

The following letter in reply to a clipping from the Montgomery Advertiser, appearing in the Union of last weeks issue, by Mr. C. N. Eiland was refused publication by the editor of that paper which is characteristic of its former methods.

Editor Union, Clanton, Ala.

Dear Sir:—I notice in your paper a reprint from the Montgomery Advertiser, which gives an account of a speech delivered in New York by Clarence Darrow, the famous Socialist lawyer of Chicago, in which, it is claimed he advocated race almalgamation with the negro as a solution of the race problem. I do not affirm nor deny the statement as I am aware of the fact that northern people irrespective of political faith tolerates marriage between whites and blacks as evidenced by proof given during the recent amendment campaign.

If white people and negroes marry in Ohio I am sure that the Socialists are not responsible for it as they are not in power there. In fact the Socialists are somewhat divided over the negro question in their opinions.

Some Socialists believe that the race problem can be solved by colonization only, while others think this is not necessary. Socialists do not advocate negro equality. The editor of the Appeal to Reason, in a recent issue of that paper, which is the leading Socialist paper in the United States, said the whites and blacks should not and would never associate together together, while Col. Dick Maulks, editor of the National Rip Saw hates negroes as bad as any Southerner.

Would it be fair to say that all Republicans believe in negro equality because certain ones of that party believe in it? I believe that the Union's motives are to leave the impression that all Socialists believe in negro equality.

Yours truly,

C. N. EILAND.

VERY LIKE BUSINESS MATTER

Little Romance in Many of the Marriages Contracted by German Couples.

From the beginning the little German girl is trained to matrimony. "Eat your fish fresh and marry your daughter while she is young," runs the German proverb. The girl, coming from a race of practical minded, deft handed people with a counter balance of idealism, has her dreams of a fairy prince. They dwindle and fade in the face of realities till at last she is glad to marry a sober business man from 10 to 20 years her senior. This discrepancy in years is due to the circumstance that a man in Germany, according to government regulations, must spent so many years in preparation for his profession that by the time he is able to support a wife he is at the age when an American man has already made the initial success of his career. But men and women are anxious enough to marry.

When other hope fails some of them advertise, for many German newspapers have a kind of marriage market in their columns. Such advertisements read:

"I am still young, strong, and with a fortune of 12,000 marks. How shall I go about getting a husband? Kind advice sought by ——— and so on."

"A Jewish lady of 25, beautiful, with a dowry of 200,000 marks, would like to marry a man of title and good family. She would be willing to be baptized into his religion. A meeting must be arranged for in a dignified manner."

"The manager of a good business would like to marry a pretty widow, very strong, weighing about 180, but of good figure, and with a fortune of a few thousand marks."

POISE OF TROUT AND KESTREL

Both the Fish and Bird Present Alluring Sight to the Lover of Beauties of Nature.

As the kestrel is to the clouds so is the trout to the crystal waters. Both kestrels and trout display that magical poising, as if suspended by invisible threads—only now and then, when cross currents are encountered, is a sign given to show that life itself is not in suspense.

A brief agitation of the kestrel's wings, a swishing of the trout's tail—the cross current is weathered, and bird or fish poises motionless again. And as when walking along we are pulled up in ever fresh wonder by the sight of the hovering kestrel, so we must needs pause on a bridge when there is a trout in the stream below.

He looks his best poising with head to the stream—a shapely form against the background of smooth brown pebbles and waving emerald weeds. Lean over the bridge with eyes on the trout and vision is conjured—an alluring fly drops on the water, then a slack line tightens, there is a song from the reel, a rod bends; there follows a dazzling dance of vermilion spots against the green of the bank.

Or as we come to the bridge on a winter's day we think we hear a mighty splashing of water over the pebbles—which turns out to be the play of 30 or 40 trout—the play of the last round of some water tourney. As they come to the surface, rolling and wallowing—their great fat sides look twice as big as when seen through the clear water—they almost make a dam across the stream as they jostle each other seeking for the choicest places on the spawning bed.

Life's Lessons.

An old gentleman, well on in years, sits handsomely and naturally in the bow-window of his age, scanning experience with reverted eye; and, chirping and smiling, communicates the accidents and reads the lesson of his long career. Opinions are strengthened, indeed, but they are also weeded out in the course of years. What remains steadily present to the eye of the retired veteran in his hermitage, what still ministers to his content, what still quickens his old honest heart—these are "the real long-lived things"—that Whitman tells us to prefer. Where youth agrees with age, not where they differ, wisdom abides, and it is when the young disciple finds his heart to beat in tune with his gray-bearded teacher's that a lesson may be learned.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

A Poultry Point.

"Always ask for the right leg of chicken or turkey," said a chef. "If the left leg is offered you, refuse it. It will be tough and stringy.

"You see, these birds nearly always roost on one leg, the left. Hence, that leg becomes very muscular. The sinews are like steel. It is an excellent leg from the athletic, but a vile one from the culinary point of view.

"But the favored right leg remains tender and juicy. Therefore, as the advertisements say, ask for and insist on getting the right leg."

Proclaims His Feelings.

Without the doctor and my better half I have my doubts whether there would have been an opportunity to write this, and this reminds me to say that, against protestations, I'm prepared to say, there is no easement to the afflicted and no satisfaction so intensely intense as when you are sick and pain seems unbearable to let your voice proclaim the feeling. Stoicism is very noble, to be sure, but when nature demands the tribute of a hearty groan or grunt from a sufferer she is apt to revenge herself if it is suppressed.—Ocala Star.

FOES ONLY DURING DEBATE

And That Ended, Recriminating Senators Speedily Forget Their Differences.

The late John J. Ingalls, senator from Kansas, let loose in the senate one day about Conkling, Hancock and several other distinguished people. His remarks were particularly severe.

Joe Blackburn, then senator from Kentucky, was chosen to answer Ingalls, and he took a good deal of hide off the brilliant Kansan. In one paragraph Blackburn said: "And this man has the temerity to assail Hancock—Hancock the Superb—who was giving of his life's blood on the heights of Gettysburg while the senator from Kansas was skulking along behind a regiment of Kansas jayhawkers, trying those jayhawkers in the capacity of judge advocate for robbing hen roosts."

There was more of the same kind, and everybody thought there would be trouble, inasmuch as Ingalls was high spirited and Blackburn unafraid.

After the senate adjourned Blackburn and Ingalls met, face to face, in the corridor in front of the marble room. A dozen spectators looked for carnage.

Ingalls stopped, looked squarely into Blackburn's eyes and Blackburn glared back.

"Joe," said Ingalls, putting out his hand, "isn't this cruel war over?"

"It is," said Blackburn, taking the offered hand, and they went off arm in arm.—Saturday Evening Post.

PECULIAR VISION OF FISH

Hypothesis That Seems to Explain the Constant Revolution of the Eyeball.

The medium in which fresh-water fishes live gives them a chance to see a great distance only in the horizontal direction. It seems impossible to explain the constant revolution of the eyeball on any other hypothesis except that the optical axis extends forward instead of sidewise.

When a fish wishes to eat anything, either at the bottom of the pond or at the surface of the water, it swims directly toward the object; and in this case the eyes are instantly adjusted in line with the body, so as to bring the image of the particle desired upon the posterior portion of the retina. In this case they lose their horizontal position.

If a fish wishes to turn to the right or left in the water, the first movement is that of the eyes in unison in the direction of the turning. This would be entirely unnecessary if the apparent axis was the axis of the most distinct vision, as one of the eyes would see all that was to be seen on the side of the turning. After this movement of the eyes, the body turns enough to bring the eyes into their normal position, then there is again a movement of the eyes, and next a movement of the body. This causes a peculiar jerking motion of the eyeballs during the whole time of the turning of the body.

Proud of His Prospects.

Louis Pierre was one of a number of Canadian immigrants who settled at Fitzgerald, Ga. As he spoke both French and English, he rapidly became a man of importance, and was successively elected to the offices of city marshal, coroner and justice of the peace.

A dispute arose between the French and English settlers as to the superiority of the United States over the Canadian provinces. They finally agreed to leave the decision to Judge Pierre, who handed down this decision:

"Yeost tage a look at me. Ferst dey mage me constabul, den coroner, und now joostis of de pees. Soon I be ze governair, den senator, den president. I wood be ze long time in Canadaire 'fore dey mage me queen."—Circle Magazine.

A Polytheist.

"When the late Bishop Foss was president of Amenia seminary," said an aged Methodist of Philadelphia, "I once heard him deliver an interesting Easter address on heathenism and idolatry.

"Bishop Foss showed us, with a little story, the bad effect that the many gods of polytheism has upon the mind.

"He said a little English boy living in India was rebuked by his mother for telling a falsehood.

"'God, if you tell falsehoods, will be very angry with you,' said the mother.

"'Very well,' the youngster answered. 'Then I will change my god.'"

Blessed Illusions.

Thank heaven that a little illusion is left to us, to enable us to be useful and agreeable—that we don't know exactly what our friends think of us—that the world is not made of looking glass, to show us just the figure we are making, and just what is going on behind our backs! By the help of dear friendly illusion, we are able to dream that we are charming—and our faces wear a becoming air of self-possession; we are able to dream that other men admire our talents—and our benignity is undisturbed; we are able to dream what we are doing much good—and we do a little.—George Eliot.

Boisterous Mirth.

"What makes you laugh so loudly whenever Biggins tells a funny story?"

"In self-defense. I want to make so much noise he can't tell another."

IBEX HUNTING IS BEST SPORT

Philadelphia Man Had Great Time in China, But Objects to Too Much Mutton.

New York—Benjamin Chew and G. L. Harrison of Philadelphia have reached this city on their way home from a six months' ibex hunt in China.

Mr. Chew has hunted in the Rocky Mountains and in Africa, along the White Nile, but seems to believe that the best sport he has had so far has been in China, high up in the Thian-Shan, amid snow and ice, with the Khan-Tengri peak frowning down on him from its height of 24,000 feet above the level of the sea. He and Mr. Harrison roamed about at a level of 10,000 feet. To get to the hunting ground the two men had to travel 800 miles by wagon and the remaining 460 miles by pack mules. At times they had twenty to thirty mules. The route was hazardous.

"I fell through so many crevasses I forgot to count them," Mr. Chew said on the pier. "And Mr. Harrison had his own time of it."

"The ibex, which is the largest variety of Thian-Shan goat, is hard to find. There are herds of sixty to seventy, but sometimes it takes weeks to find a herd. I was going along a ridge and came across a herd of buck ibex. Before I could do anything something frightened the animals and they came on a run toward me. I brought down six of them, and it was from that six that I obtained my biggest head—54 inches. All the trophies I gathered I intend adding to my collection."

Mr. Chew said there were times when he became ravenously hungry during long tramps from the camp site. He would have been better pleased, he added, if his meals had not consisted of mutton and potatoes and potatoes and mutton, but he never went short of tobacco for his pipe.

ASCRIBE HIS HEALTH TO PIE

Man of 97, Straight as Soldier and Spry, Gives Secret of His Longevity.

St. Louis, Mo.—The most remarkable man in Belleville, Benjamin West, who is 97 years old, straight as a soldier and spry as a kitten, has at last given the world the secret of his longevity.

Here it is::

PIE.

Despite the fact that pie, in a double sense, is about the shortest thing there is, it will make you live longest if you stick to it—as a steady diet, Mr. West says.

Any kind of pie will do, from Washington pie to lemon meringue. All are equally stimulating and helpful, says this wonderful old man.

Mr. West was formerly a merchant in Belleville, but he retired in 1884 and has since lived in Minneapolis. Twice each year he comes to Belleville to visit his son Robert.

"I'm going to have a centennial myself in three years and I want to get some pointers," he said.

"Rules of health? Well, I can't say that I have any. I have just lived a prudent life.

"I never miss my three big meals a day. Next to pie I like vegetables best as a steady diet. I am not a vegetarian, but I have proved in my own case at least that vegetables are the healthiest food. I eat milk and eggs, but I like cabbage, beets, turnips, corn and potatoes much better."

Mr. West says that he has not been ill a day for many years. As a young man he was sickly and it was predicted that he would die before he was 30.

Aliens Rejected.

There have been rejected at the United States ports during the past year 10,411 aliens, or about 1.09 per cent of the total number applying for admission. During the year 2,124 warrants of deportation were executed after the granting of hearings to the arrested aliens, as compared with 2,069 executed during the previous year.—Chicago Examiner.

Liver Trouble Remedy Free

Any intelligent person can be his own doctor in the ordinary case of liver trouble, for the symptoms cannot be mistaken. If the white of the eye becomes yellowish, if the skin becomes sallow, if pimples and blotches appear, if the bowels do not move, if you have sick headache, if you are bilious, you may be sure that your liver is torpid or inactive.

The quickest and surest remedy yet found for the cure of liver trouble or any of its symptoms is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the great herb laxative compound. This wonderful remedy is not only a laxative, but a tonic as well. It will start the flow of gastric juice, thereby soon enabling the liver to do its work naturally. A bottle of this great liver remedy can be bought of any druggist for 50 cents or $1, and in many cases a single bottle has cured a chronic case.

For example, John W. Lee, 619 S. Pennsylvania ave., Indianapolis, Ind., had a stubborn and very long-standing case of liver trouble, with pimples, blotches, jaundice, etc., and it cured him. Mrs. B. Flinchum, Jackson, Ky., says the same of it. Thousands of families keep it in the house against just such an emergency, as you can never tell when some member of the family will need a good laxative.

In order to have you or any other sufferer from the liver make a test of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin without personal expense, Dr. Caldwell will send you a free test bottle if you will send your name and address. The sample will show you how pleasant it is to take, how gently it works. It will start you on the cure of your trouble and convince you that you have found a cure. That is the object of the sample, and the doctor urges you to send for it today.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Ancient Superstition.

Parat, an apothecary of Paris, jealous of his wife, compelled her under fear of death to run needles through a wax image of the suspected lover. Thus was there a continuance of an old practice known to Sicilians in the days of Theocritus. Thus are we reminded of Rossetti's "Sister Helen" and a tragic scene in "The Return of the Native." We read not long ago that this spell of the wax image was still practised in counties of England. Was it ever practiced in New England? Are such dolls now made in this country, and melted so that with it a rival or an enemy may waste away?

Time's Sad Changes.

"I met a gentle but entirely unreconstructed native during a recent trip through North Carolina," said a northern tourist, according to Browning's Magazine, "and he was in constant lamentation over what he regarded the deterioration of things down there from what they were in ante-bellum days. His regretful comparisons of things then with their condition now, to the disadvantage of the latter, were striking. One evening, admiring a brilliant and beautiful setting of the sun, I exclaimed enthusiastically: 'What a magnificent sunset—splendid! gorgeous!' The unreconstructed native, gazing at it a moment, said, in melancholy tone and with a deep sigh: 'Yes; but, ah! you should have seen it before the war!'"

What Others Say About It.

Many of the best people in Tennessee and adjoining states recommend St. Joseph's Liver Regulator as being a splendid laxative and liver medicine. Its occasional use will keep the system in good condition, thus assisting nature to establish good health. It will remove the pile and effete matter from the system, and as a rule, Nature "will do the rest," Try it. It is well endorsed. It is made in both liquid and powders. Druggists and dealers sell it, liquid, 50 cents a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25 cents a box. Upchurch Drug co.

POULTRY THRIVE ON ALFALFA

Experiment Demonstrates That It Is Excellent as Green Feed for the Growing Chickens.

(MISS E. ROBERTSON)

I have demonstrated to my satisfaction during the past year, that alfalfa and clover both as a green feed for growing chicks, and a winter feed for adult fowls.

I have a field of ten acres sown to alfalfa stretching just below the chicken coops and pens where I raise my chicks.

A year ago last summer I noticed that as soon as I gave the chicks free range they would seek this field and spend hours in the growing alfalfa, particularly when it blossomed ready for cutting.

On close observation I found that they ate the tender tops and purple buds ravenously and certainly seemed to thrive on the food.

I then tried sowing some seed in my nursery pen, and it was wonderful to see how the chicks enjoyed it—see the following just from the incubator. This set me to thinking.

When last winter came on I housed 150 pure Buff Cochin pullets in a fairly roomy and comfortable house. The large hay barn was stored to the roof with alfalfa and millet hay. From the former the leaves and dried blossoms still green in hue, fell in masses of the fragrant litter, useless to the cattle and horses which only ate the tender stems.

All winter long I used this alfalfa chaff for litter in my houses, bedding the floor deep every day. The hens scratched in it for their grain and ate every available bit they could pick up. By night the floor would be bare and a fresh supply was thrown in ready for the morning meal.

My hens have always done well as winter layers, but last season they outdid themselves and made a record which is the wonder and envy of all my neighbors.

I give the credit to alfalfa, especially as some close neighbors with warm houses (one of them heated—who bought patent egg making foods, protein and blood meal in large quantities and who have bone mills and fed green bone all winter, with oyster shells, sharp grit and cut clover got next to no eggs at all.

In fact, the one who has the heated chicken house, did not average three eggs a week and the other barely got enough for family use. One has a flock of 500 Brown Leghorns and the other 250 pure Barred Rocks.

In past winters eggs from my old hens have been few and far between. It was the pullets that laid the eggs, but not only did the hens lay last winter but want to set just as if it was summer weather.

I broke up as many as a dozen broody hens last January. In the face of facts like these I naturally give the credit to alfalfa.

This was the sole addition to their feed and the only grain they had was corn and an occasional feed of boiled oats for we did not sow wheat last fall.

The Multitudes Fed

Sunday School Lesson for May 29, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 14:13-21; 15:29-39. Memory verses, 19, 20.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life."—John 6:35.

TIME—The feeding of the 5,000 in the spring, A. D. 29, of the 4,000 a few weeks later, in the summer.

PLACE—The first miracle at the northern end of the Sea of Galilee, the second further down on the east side, opposite Magdala (Magadan, Dalmanutha).

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

The Sick Multitudes—Matt. 14:13, 14, 15:29-31. These two miracles, though plainly separate, yet have so many resemblances that they may best be considered together, as if in parallel columns; and we must combine the accounts of all the evangelists.

On what occasion were the five thousand fed? Our Lord had just heard of the tragic death of John the Baptist, and when he heard of it he "departed thence" (the place in which the news reached him is not named) "by ship into a desert place apart." He was filled with sadness at this murder of his cousin and herald. Moreover, the event was an indication of the perils amid which he himself walked, and he may have withdrawn to avoid them, for his hour had not yet come. Besides, Herod sought to see him (Luke), and we may be sure that Christ had no desire to see Herod. Mark also tells us that the disciples had just returned from their preaching tour through Galilee, and Jesus withdrew that they might rest and that he might give them further instruction in quiet as well as talk over their experiences with them. All these motives coincided.

What miracles preceded the two feedings of the multitude? In each case a great crowd gathered around Jesus. In these cases those thronging faces were particularly eloquent, for so many of them were suffering faces. There were the lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, all cast down at Jesus' feet.

What was the result of this healing? What it should be whenever Christ blesses men: "The multitude wondered, . . . and they glorified the God of Israel." They were ready to listen with all their hearts to Christ's teaching, and remained persistently, the five thousand all day and the four thousand for three days.

The Hungry Multitudes—Matt. 14:15, 15:32. Our Lord's compassion was moved by more than the sicknesses of the multitudes; by what? By their hunger. In the first instance the crowd were passover pilgrims, in large part (John 6:4) with no homes near by to which to go; in the second case the multitude were in their own country, but the villages were few in the Decapolis.

The second miracle, with so many circumstances like the first, has been considered by certain critics to be only the first miracle disguised by a different tradition. But there are pointed differences that rule out the idea.

The Challenge to Faith—Matt. 14:16, 15:33, 34. Who suggested feeding the multitudes? Jesus, in each case. John tells of an earlier conversation with Philip, in which our Lord asked that disciple, whose faith seemingly had special need of strengthening (see John 14:8, 9), "Whence are we to buy bread, that these may eat?" But John, ever careful to guard his Master from misunderstanding, adds that Jesus said this merely to test Philip, since he himself knew well what miracle was to come.

What supplies were available for feeding these nine thousand and more? In the first case, only a lad's simple luncheon, consisting of five loaves (or rather, round flat cakes like large crackers) or coarse barley bread, together with two of the little dried or pickled fishes caught by millions in the lake and eaten along with the bread. In the second case seven "loaves" could be mustered and a few of these little fishes.

The Hungry Fed.—Matt. 14:19-21; 15:35-39. How did the Saviour arrange the multitude? In an orderly way on the grass, in "garden plots."

What was the first step in the miracle? In each case Christ asked a blessing, in accordance with his custom; thus "instructing us not to touch a meal until we had given thanks to him who giveth us this food."—Chrysostom.

What was the second step in the miracle? Christ broke off pieces of the bread and gave them to the disciples, for them to give to the multitude. This was the least ostentatious way of performing the wonder.

What was the third step in the miracle? The separate giving of the fishes (see Mark). "Some would give the poor only the barest necessities, bread only; our Lord adds fish."—Spurgeon.

What was the last step in the miracle? Preserving for future use, at Christ's command (John 6:12), the fragments of the feast.

Gather up the fragments of opportunity, as "Uncle John Vassar" did. One day, waiting for a friend in a Boston hotel, he determined not to waste the time and went right up to a fashionably dressed lady, beginning, in spite of her haughty repulses, to speak with her about Christ and the new birth. He read the Bible to her and offered prayer. Later, with tears in her eyes, she told her husband about it. He asked, "Why didn't you tell him it was none of his business?" She replied, "Dear, if you had been there and heard him, you would have thought it was his business!"

GRATITUDE OF A STRAY DOG

Collie Finds Missing Heifers and Sheep for Farmer in Return for Kindness.

Jacksonville, N. J.—Kindness extended to a stray collie dog by Ferris MacWilliams in this village brought its reward when the dog recovered for MacWilliams two heifers and 11 sheep which had strayed off in the blinding snowstorm long before daylight and were stalled in a huge drift a mile from home and on the road to Pompton.

"He's the smartest dog in northern New Jersey," MacWilliams said to a neighbor. "He will bring the sheep and cattle in at night and do everything connected with it except put up the bars. He tried to do that one day. I went out to the barnyard and saw him tugging away at one end of a fence rail and trying to lift it in place. When he saw me he barked for me to come and help him."

The heifers and sheep were put in a field near the MacWilliams home. When MacWilliams awoke a blinding snowstorm was raging, so he called his sons to go out with him to find the animals. The heifers and the sheep were not in the field and no trace of them could be found. The quest was abandoned until after breakfast. On the second trip Santa, the collie, went out with the men. Chilled to the bone by the bitter cold MacWilliams and his sons returned disheartened. They discovered, however, that Santa had not returned with them.

An hour afterward he appeared, barking delightedly. The kitchen door was opened, but he refused to enter. Seizing MacWilliams by the trousers leg he tried to pull him away from the house. That was hint enough for the farmer. He told his son Leonard to go with the dog. It was a cold and wearisome trip, but at the end of it the missing animals were found. Two wagons were pressed into use and the heifers and the sheep soon were under shelter.

DEAF "LISTEN" TO TOASTS

Chairman of Annual Banquet of English Club Terms It a "Babble of Fingers."

London—Speeches in silence, toasts proposed without an uttered word—such were the features of the proceedings at a dinner at the annual banquet of the National Deaf club, attended by about 100 members and their friends.

Yet throughout the meal and the following proceedings conversation never waned. "A babble of fingers" was how the chairman, A. J. Wilson, described it. One would notice the fingers of a diner working and twisting with wonderful quickness. Then his companions would smile broadly or utter a half chuckle. Evidently an amusing story had been related. Members talked gayly of their present enjoyment, of the club's progress, of the day's sporting results and of the hundred and one topics of a public dinner, all in dumb show, or in the oral system, the forming of words by the lips without making word sounds.

Wilson has been deaf since he was a boy of 12, but he can speak and make a neat after-dinner speech. Out of respect for the guests present, he used the spoken words. He talked slowly and well, while behind him, on a chair, stood a man interpreting the speeches into the sign and finger language, while another, an expert in the oral system, made the speech with his lips without speaking.

NOT A SPINSTER AFTER ALL

Hidden Will Shows Pennsylvania Woman Had Kept Secret of Marriage for Years.

Lewistown, Pa.—Miss Rhoda Taylor, whose friends believed her to be a spinster, died recently, and in settling her estate the administrator advertised the farm, an old homestead, with stock and implements, at public sale.

On the morning of the sale, when the auctioneer mounted the block, he announced that the affair was postponed indefinitely.

The supposed spinster's last will and testament had been found, and in it she bequeaths all her worldly goods to her husband, and attached to the document was a marriage certificate, showing that she had been married to Samuel Gilliland more than five years previous to her death.

Valuable Fox Pelt.

Averill, Mass.—A local hunter had a very successful day recently. Offered $800 for the hide of a black fox he killed, he is holding out for $1,000. This is the first black fox seen in this part of the country for over 25 years.

The man was hunting two miles north of here when his dog began baying. He found the animal standing at the entrance of a hole, into which he instantly retreated. The hunter blocked the entrance, then walked two miles and borrowed a spade. After digging 227 feet he found the fox and killed it with a blow on the head.

Draw Lots for Honors.

Traverse City, Mich.—To decide the honors of the class of 1910, Traverse City high school, it was necessary for Miss Bertha Stewart and Miss Cornelia Morrison to draw lots. For four years these two girls have been tied in their standings, both having maintained the remarkable average of 97 per cent in their studies. Miss Stewart won and will be valedictorian, while Miss Morrison will give the salutatory.

COLDS FROM EXPOSURE

The Shortest Biography.

"This is the life of little me. I am the wife of Beerbohm Tree." Thus Lady Beerbohm Tree when asked to write her "life" (surely the shortest autobiography on record). Lady Tree is shortly to appear on the variety stage, and patrons of the music halls will then have an opportunity of seeing one of England's cleverest and most distinguished actresses; for, besides her histrionic gifts, Lady Tree from an early age developed a taste for classics and mathematics. Her favorite subject was Greek, at which she was most learned, and many years ago she took part in a Greek play before an audience which included so distinguished a classical authority as the late Mr. Gladstone—Tit-Bits.

Hanged Wrong Man.

Lesurques, the principal figure in the famous judicial tragedy of the Lyons mail, which has been staged the world over, left a number of relatives at the time of his execution. When his innocence was subsequently established, Napoleon III., in 1865, granted a pension in perpetuity to the man's lineal descendants. The pension was paid by the French government until quite recently. A few days ago a Mme. Bichague, who described herself as the direct descendant of Lesurques on the female side, wrote to the minister of justice in Paris, insisting upon her right to the pension. The lady, who is 60 years old, is prepared to produce the necessary proofs in order to establish her identity.

Pupils in Slate-Smashing.

McKeesport, Pa.—Every slate in the McKeesport school has been smashed by the pupils. A recent decree of the board of health abolished the slates and substituted pads and pencils, upon the theory that slates were germ breeders.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Rights He Sees, and Some He Does Not.

Everyone should take particular notice of the last page of this issue and read the astonishing offer we are now making—an offer not only new to Chilton county and one which is of interest to all, old and young, ladies and gentlemen. You love your church—here is an opportunity to aid it in any way the trustees see fit. The young lady will enjoy wearing a diamond ring, and what boy don't enjoy a bicycle, while the ambitious young man can take a course at the best business college in the south.

A Prisoner Escapes.

On Sunday while Sheriff Catts was bringing a negro prisoner to jail from Riderville, the negro, Wade, suddenly made an assault upon the Sheriff and seizing him in his arms took from the Sheriff his own (Wades') pistol and made his escape. The Sheriff was somewhat bruised, and continued his journey to Clanton. Wade was arrested for robbery at the camps of the Jackson Lumber Company.

Editor Banner:—Will you please publish the following article in your paper.

The Sunday School Convention of District 1. met at Mars Hill Church last Sunday the 29th. The Convention was called to order by District President, W. H. Shaw. Devotional exercises were conducted by Mr. J. R. Gentry. The regular program was taken up. The first subject, the benefits of graded Sunday School Classes was discussed by several, Messers Alex Glass, J. B. Northcutt, C. H. Glass and W. H. Shaw. Each talk was splendid but as our schools are so poorly graded it was rather hard for the speakers to give any advantage of the work, yet each one was of the opinion that for Sunday School study to be a success in our modern time the class must be graded. Following these remarks Prof. Snyder, of Thornby Institute was presented to the convention to discuss Bible Training work. Prof. Snyder came with a heart full of enthusiasm for this special branch of work, stating our S. S could not be graded properly until we had better trained teachers. He presented a blackboard design of an open Bible and the head of a child, pointing from the Bible to the child was a complex key, below the key the trained teacher held the key to unlock the message as the Bible to the mind of the child by a method. Everyone enjoys having this work explained by one who had the work so deeply at heart. A short talk was made by Rev. Lucas of Shelby county. We might say his theme was temperance principally, and made some striking blows for the cause.

Dinner was announced and the congregation was dismissed, after which a bounteous of eatables were spread by the generous people of Mars Hill. The afternoon session consisted of a song service in the church led by Prof. Gilbert, and at the same hour a short conference of S. S. teachers and Superintendents led by Prof. Snyder.

The convention was called to order and reports from various schools in the district were given. Eleven Schools were represented and showed growing reports. We were sorry to learn some of our large schools were disbanded, and some failed to send any kind of report.

A general report of the work in the district was made by the Secretary for the two years work. While the Schools are all in fairly good shape, those that have survived the primary fears our district will lose her blue star we worked so hard for last year. We hope how ever we will be "pleasantly disappointed." Miss Addie Hornsby was elected as Secretary for the coming year. Prof. Shaw was reelected for his same position for has so nobly filled the place. We shall pray for great things in our Sunday Schools in this pole of christian workers known as this district.

Normal singing was one of the splendid features. In fact this was a day of days. The next Convention will be held at Jemison Baptist church, Saturday in the work.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Thorsby, Ala., May 30, 1910.

Ha! ha! boys, would you find the judge guilty on Mr. Mahan's statement? I would smile and say you would in the first degree.

Didn't he fall down on the statement of Hon. S. L. Brewer? That 'ooks to me like somebody not attending to their own business and letting other folks alone.

How would Solicitor Bowling have known anything about what the Judge knew of Mr. Littleton pleading guilty to him if someone had not been out of their place meddling with something that did not concern them?

That is not the only case that has been meddled with by a jugful, I will tell you boys anybody can foo some people sometimes, but you can't fool everybody all the time.

Yes, a letter was written to the paper on this subject as long as a fence rail, but he didn't explain matters to the satisfaction of many I hear talk.

I don't see anything wrong in Mr. Mahan writing to The Banner when the Union refused to publish his letter. I feel like if I ever did commit a political sin it was when I voted for L. H. R. I will not be guilty of that any more, I guess this is enough for this time. The Coon don't come often but she makes the fur fly when she does come.

With best wishes to The Banner.

IMPORTANT S. S. RESOLUTION.

At Thorsby last Sunday the District Sunday School Convention unanimously voted to hold its quarterly meetings hereafter on some other day than Sunday. It was agreed that it may cut down the attendance somewhat, but that on the whole it will be better for the Sunday schools which too after have suffered by reason of the absence of their officers and teachers who have gone to the Convention. A strong resolution also was passed with regard to all day singing on Sunday. It seemed to be the unanimous opinion of the delegates and visitors that this custom effects S. S. and church services very unfavorably, and on the whole is injurious to the moral and spiritual welfare of our committees. The members of the Convention pledged themselves not to encourage the practice.

ATTENTION SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS.

The Executive committee in Clanton, Tuesday and arranged program and place of meeting for the County Sunday school convention, which is to be held at Verbena, Tuesday and Wednesday, July 5-6. Program will be published next week if all necessary arrangements can be made.

As the time is short, and the work to be done is great, let us all get a hustle on ourselves and make this one the very best convention we have ever had, we can do it if we try.

Let me urge all Sunday school Superintendents, to be sure and elect two delegates, (as that is the number each school is entitled to) at once, please don't delay this matter for procrastination is the thief of time and has been the cause of many a sad defeat.

From now on until the convention is over, let us be earnestly engaged in prayer to our Father, and that He shall give us wisdom to do the things that needs to be done, and then we shall be blessed in the doing of them. Then let each one be willing to do his or her part in this work for the Master, and then go forward in this great work with the assurance that God will shower His blessings down on us in our convention work. Arise, let us go hence. We can do it if we try.

Fraternally,

A. K. HORN, County President.

Applies as well to our physical state as to material things. C. J. Budlong, Washington, R. I. realized his condition, and took warning before it was too late. This should be a warning to all not to neglect to take Foley's Kidney Remedy until it is too late." For sale by Upchurch Drug Co.

ALLEGED GRAFTING IN THE HIGH PLACES

Lorimer Affair In Illinois Has Caused Sensation.

Bursting like a bomb while United States Senator Lorimer was delivering his vindication speech at Washington, D. C., State Senator John Broderick, a leading Chicago democrat, was indicted on a bribery charge by the grand jury at Springfield, Ill.

Broderick's indictment, it is said, was the direct result of a confession made to the grand jury by State Senator D. W. Holstlaw, of Iuka, Ill., who says Broderick paid him $2,500 to vote for Lorimer for senator. A capias was ordered at once for Broderick, and a bench warrant issued for his arrest.

$4,700 All Told for Votes.

The unexpected turn in the Lorimer scandal is said to have been an offshoot of State's Attorney Burke's investigation of alleged graft in a legislative furniture deal. Senator Holstlaw has been indicted on a prejury charge in connection with the furniture contract, and upon advice of his lawyers, when offered immunity, agreed to make a confession. Then he told the grand jury that he had received $2,500 for his vote for Lorimer; $700 as his share of a legislative "jackpot", and a promise of $1,500 as his share of the state house furnitpre deal.

Confession Corroborated.

Senator Holtslaw's confession regarding the furniture deal was corroborated before the grand jury by Otto Freier, of Chicago, who, as agent for the Ford-Johnson Furniture Company, obtained the furniture contract.

The two confessions regarding the furniture contract resulted in two additional indictments, on a conspiracy charge. These were State Senator S. C. Pemberton, republican, of Oakland, Ill., and Representative Joseph S. Clark, democrat, of Vandalia, Ill.

As in the case of Senator Broderick, in the Lorimer alleged bribery matter, capiases and bench warrants were immediately issued for Senator Pemberton and Representative Clark, on the conspiracy charges in connection with the furniture contract.

BALLINGER INVESTIGATION.

Report of Congressional Committee May Come Soon.

Washington advices say that the report of the congressional committee appointed to investigate the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy will, in all likelihood, be published about the middle of July. There may be two reports, one signed by Senator Nelson, of Minnesota, chairman of the joint committee, and the majority members, and the other by the insurgents and democrats on the committee.

While it is generally believed that Secretary Ballinger will be entirely exonerated of wrong doing, and Gifford Pinchot, Louis R. Gavis and others among the accusers will be criticized for what the committee may term "their misguided zeal," nevertheless the opinion prevails that Secretary Ballinger's resignation will be in the hands of President Taft before November.

It is reported that Secretary Ballinger has already intimated to his friends that he thought of resigning but he declared he would never resign under fire.

AGED MAN KILLS SELF.

Suffering From Remorse, William Young Sought Death.

Hanging by the neck from a rope tied to the limb of a tree in a dense thicket near the Atlanta city stockade, the dead body of William S. Young, aged 62 years, was found.

He had been missing for several days from the home of F. C. A. Mullen, on Glenwood avenue, where he had lived for the past year.

Suffering from remorse because of a terrible crime for which it is said he served twenty years in the penitentiary, coupled with broken and feeble health, and the fact that his children no longer cared for him, formed the motive, it is believed, which prompted the old man to seek a lonely spot and take his life.

HUNTER FOUND GUILTY.

Charged With Atrocious Triple Murder at Savannah, Ga.

Guilty of the atrocious murder of his wife, Mrs. Maggie Hunter, and aged Mrs. Eliza Gribble and her daughter, Mrs. Carrie Ohleander, in the Perry street murders here last December was the verdict returned against J. C. Hunter in Chatham superior court at Savannah.

The verdict came after the jury had been out but twenty-six minutes and was a distinct surprise both because many persons believed the solely circumstantial evidence adduced by the prosecution would leave a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jurors, and because it was believed the jury would not agree quickly upon the verdict in any case.

The murders for which Hunter is now under death sentence were committed in the early afternoon of December 12 in a small frame two-story house on Perry street. Mrs. Gribble's skull was crashed in with blows of a blunt instrument. She was very old. Her daughter, too, met death almost instantly from blows over the head. Mrs. Hunter, the wife of the convicted man, was not dead when a patrolman pushed open the door of the house on the terrible scene, but died several days later in a hospital without recovering consciousness sufficiently to tell who struck her. She babbled of a "white man" who attacked her.

W. H. Walls, a white man, and John Cooker, a negro, are charged with aiding Hunter and are prisoners.

CHANNEL DISASTER.

French Boat, Struck By Steamer, Is Sent to Bottom.

Twenty-three men were drowned in the English channel when the French submarine boat Pluviose was struck by the packet steamer Pas DeCalais. The passengers on the latter were thrown into panic, and the ship itself was so badly damaged that she had to put back to Calais.

The fighting ship was scudding along partly submerged when the steamer crashed into her. According to the reports, the submarine spun around for a moment and then the water began to pour through a big rent in her plates. Before a man could escape she had foundered in one of the deepest parts of the channel.

This is the sixth serious accident in the French submarine flotilla in five years.

TWO HUNDRED ARE KILLED IN BATTLE

Americans Take an Important Part In Struggle.

By the unerring marksmanship of American gunners the government army has been repulsed in its attack on Bluefields and the custom house has been recaptured by the forces of the provisional government. Two hundred have been killed in the fighting and more than 400 wounded.

The government forces were too slow in following up their victory of Wednesday. This dilatoriness gave the Americans in the insurgent ranks time to rally the Estradan leaders and the repulse of the Madriz forces began.

As the army of Madriz fell back under the heavy rain of shells, again and again it attempted to hold its ground, throwing up trenches about the city. The soldiers were killed as they dug the ditches, picked off by the field guns operated by the American soldiers of fortune, or picked off by the sharpshooters from the states.

The Madriz army appeared to be handicapped by lack of proper armament.

With the fortunes of the insurgents almost from the first dependent upon the efforts of the Americans holding commands in the Estradan army, the Nicaraguan war is now clearly more a struggle between Americans than between Central Americans. Men from the states form the backbone of each army.

MANY ARE BURNED.

Details of Great Disaster in Japanese Town—Loss $2,500,000.

The story of how 100 persons were burned to death and 8,000 buildings were destroyed with a loss of $2,500,000, was told at Victoria, B. C., when the liner Inaba arrived with the details of the fire that swept Oomori, Japan.

Thirty thousand persons were rendered homeless by the fire and several hundred by a powder explosion which followed the blaze. Famine and pestilence still menaces the refugees.

It is reported that Colonel L. L. Middlebrook, of Covington, Ga., who is serving his fifth term in the Georgia legislature, announces that he is in the race for governor of Georgia. This is a surprise in politics, as no one except close friends had any idea that he would make the race for governor until it was announced.

and J. P. Halligan Plead Guilty.

ANARCHISTS PLOT DEATHS OF RULERS

Alfonso, of Spain, and Manuel, of Portugal, Marked Men.

It is reported that secret warnings have been sent to the government officials at Lisbon that an attempt upon the life of King Manuel is likely to be made upon his return from London. The Spanish police in tracing the details of the widespread anarchist plot for a campaign of terrorism have found that not only are King Alfonso and King Manuel of Portugal marked for death, but members of their governments as well. It is believed that the conspiracy extends no farther than the Iberian peninsula, but secret service officials of other governments are co-operating in the work of ferreting out the conspiracy.

It is reported that several have been secretly arrested at Madrid, and there are even hints that the conspiracy extends to army circles.

The scheme embraces a general uprising on the Iberian peninsula, without regard to national boundaries, according to the facts already learned. Only England's position as a political refuge prevented attempts on Alfonso and Manuel in London during the obsequies over King Edward. It was upon advices sent from Madrid, however, that the Paris police, upon the arrival of Manuel there, took extraordinary precautions to guard the Portuguese monarch's life. While no specific statement has yet been made as to the connection of Tasczelli, the victim of Monday's bomb outrage at Madrid, with the plot, it is considered certain that he was one of the important figures in what is regarded as the most systematic plan arranged by the anarchists in years.

SEYLER IS ACQUITTED.

Goes Free on Charge of Killing Jane Adams at Atlantic City.

William T. Seyler, who was acquitted of the murder of pretty Jane Adams on the million-dollar pier, has arrived at his home from Mays Landing. He was loudly cheered by a crowd at the station.

"Although I had no fear of the outcome, I am very thankful for the jury's verdict, and I am grateful to every one who has stuck by me," he said.

In marked contrast to the day that William Seyler and his brother, Orvis, were brought back to Atlantic City, after their arrest, was the scene of their arrival.

It appeared almost incredible that the men who had been hooted, hissed and threatened as they stepped from the train on their way to the police headquarters when they were brought back from Virginia only three months ago should have received the ovation that was given them on their return as free men.

The acquitted man hastened to his home and the wife who had been loyal to him. Their meeting was pathetic.

MRS. MORSE'S FIGHT.

All Her Household Effects Will Go In Effort to Secure Pardon for Husband.

Mrs. Charles W. Morse is quoted as saying that she will sell all her household effects and art objects to raise funds to continue the fight for her husband's release from the federal prison at Atlanta.

For months Mrs. Morse has been directing the work of obtaining names to a monster petition praying for a presidential pardon for the convicted banker and maintaining offices here as headquarters. The Morse home on Fifth avenue has already been sold and Mrs. Morse must soon vacate. She intends to visit her husband at Atlanta soon.

AUTO TURNED TURTLE.

Misses Lillian Wright and Flossie Herman, of Columbus, O., Meet Death.

Miss Lillian Wright and Miss Flossie Herman were instantly killed at Logan, Ohio, by their automobile turning turtle. Several others were reported to have been severely injured.

The occupants of the automobiles were returning from a party at midnight. William Snyder, president of lumber company, and driver of the machine, ran over an embankment near Young's bridge. Mrs. Don Goss had a rib fractured and Mr. Snyder's leg was broken. Miss Wright was to have been married in a few days.

AEROPLANE FLIGHTS.

New Device for Use in Windy Weather Is Given a Successful Trial.

Several aeroplane flights, lasting an hour and a half and covering distances from one-quarter to one-half mile at an altitude of 15 feet were made at Newburyport, Mass., by William Hillard, in a Herring Burgess biplane at the Plum island aviation grounds. There was a brisk breeze at the time.

The bi-plane has lately been equipped with a new device to give lateral stability. The device is intended especially for use in windy weather and had its first real test. The inventor and Mr. Hillard say that it worked remarkably well.

SUGAR WEIGHERS' TRIAL.

Prosecution in Trial of Heike and Others Claim Winning Points.

The prosecution in the trial of Charles R. Heike, secretary of the sugar trust, charged, with five co-defendants with conspiring to defraud the government out of customs duties, claims to have won another big point when Judge Martin admitted the evidence of Harry H. Waters, an expert accountant.

Waters, who is also an assistant deputy collector of the port, had, it is said, prepared a report on statements taken from the records of the trust whereby the government expects to show that Heike and Ernest W. Gerbracht, formerly superintendent of the Williamsburg refineries, were familiar with the frauds.

The figures prepared by Waters were made from technical statements of the sugar trust, which the prosecution, it is said, has already proved were sent to No. 117 Wall street, and to Heike from Gerbracht's office.

It is said the report of Waters shows that the statements received by Heike covered all the shipments of sugar, both ingoing and outgoing, with the true weights.

The defendants in the sugar underweighing conspiracy trial will plead guilty, their counsel, Henry M. Conchrane, has announced, it is said. The men are former Assistant Dock Superintendent Henry Walker and the two government weighers, Jean F. Voelker and James Halligan, Jr.

Shortly after the opening of the trial, when the prosecution announced that it rested its case, counsel for Walker, Halligan and Voelker withdrew their former pleas of not guilty, and entered a plea of guilty to all the charges. Sentence was deferred.

YOUTH LOSES HIS LIFE.

Tried to Save Negro Boy From Drowning Near Hephziba, Ga.

Walter Kelly, fifteen years old, a member of a prominent family of Hephzibah, Ga., lost his life Sunday afternoon at a pond near his home while trying to save the life of a negro boy, Henry Bryan.

The negro shouted for helf and Kelly, who was near by, plunged into the pond without disrobing. He reached the negroe's side just as he was going down for the last time. The negro locked his arm around Kelly's throat and they both sank together. They came up one more time and the negro still had his hold on the white boy's throat. They both drowned before help could reach them.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES. — Divers have begun an investigation of the sinking of the floating dry dock Dewey, which was towed to the Philippines from the Atlantic coast. One report circulated at Manila is that her valves were opened maliciously while she was preparing to receive a vessel. It is believed, however, that raising her from the 70 feet of water where she went down will be easy. The naval investigation into the cause, began immediately, is expected to develop sensations. It is said that it can be raised again in a few weeks.

NOTES FROM NATION'S CAPITAL. — Diplomats at Washington conversant with Eastern questions can not speak of China without being conscious of the anti-foreign feeling in many parts of the great empire. It seems to them that another great anti-foreign uprising is gathering in the empire, which may become even more formidable than the Boxer revolution. When these diplomats are challenged to produce evidence of the vast unrest in China they point to the anti-foreign feeling in Chang Sha, the cancellation of contracts with foreigners, the refusal to grant further concessions, and, further, the uncompromising attitude toward foreigners assumed by Chinese officials recently.

SAFETY PINS IN PUCKER!

Handy Cushion That Will Fit Handbag, Purse, or Other Small Receptacle.

Just for carrying a few pins in the pocket or handbag, there is nothing more convenient than a little cushion such as this. It is made of two heart shaped pieces of cardboard, measuring 3½ inch across the widest part from A to A.

The card is first covered with a thin layer of wadding, then with some pretty piece of silk embroidered with the monogram of the owner, or even an initial letter, the opposite side might have just a little spray of flowers worked on it, or might be in fancy silk of some kind.

Fix the silk over the wadding-covered card by lacing it across the back from edge to edge with a needle and cotton. Cut up a little wool into half-inch lengths or less, and make a little padding between the card; it should not be more than a third-of-an-inch thick, or, if preferred, it may be left out altogether. Work buttonhole round the edge of card, and seam the two together by the buttonhole. Another and simpler plan is not to work the buttonhole, but just to seam the edges of silk together. The pins are, of course, stuck in round the edges between the two layers of card.

Watering Plants.

Wrong Watering—All plants like to have their leaves sprinkled, but to sprinkle the soil about them as a means of giving the roots a drink does very little good, and a thorough soaking once a week is infinitely better than a slight daily wetting. When flowers or vines are planted near a house they are in especial danger of suffering from lack of water and should have much more than in other situations. Among the plants which are heavy drinkers are dahlias, heliotrope forget-me-nots, Japanese iris. Nasturtiums and poppies both will starve and go thirsty contentedly, only blooming the better.—Harper's Bazar.

Peat Not Good Fuel.

Experiments made last year on the Swedish railroads in regard to the possibility of employing peat as a fuel for locomotives of various types have not given the results which were hoped for. On the contrary, they show that the locomotives now in use are not suitable for the employment of peat, unless this is mixed with a large proportion of other fuel. In consequence of these results, the engineers of the Swedish government railways are engaged in designing locomotives better adapted for the combustion of peat and with these locomotives the experments will be continued.

An unknown woman tried to commit suicide at Marianna, Fla., at the Chipola river bridge by throwing herself directly in front of engine No. 1 northbound, on the Louisville & Nashville railway. According to the statement of Engineer Ben Smith, the woman was accompanied by another woman, who seized her skirts and dragged her off the track. But for this she would have been instantly killed.

Concealing himself behind a log with his gray whiskers protruding, LeRoy Roberts, a farmer, of Ripley, Tenn., succeeded in his undertaking of "fooling" his hunting companion, Estes Montgomery by "barking" like a squirrel. Montgomery in his haste to kill what he thought was a gray squirrel, pumped one barrel of his shotgun at Roberts, who may lose both eyes as the result of bird-shot wounds.

Charles C. Dickinson, formerly president of the Carnegie Trust Company and a millionaire, died in Roosevelt hospital, New York City, of heart failure and pneumonia, following a mysterious inhalation of poisonous gases in the laboratory of a friend. Dickinson was an amateur chemist of considerable ability and was witnessing some experiments when the gases overcame him.

A Rockland, Me., dispatch says that twenty-two of the crew of the passenger steamer James T. Morse narrowly escaped when that ship was rammed and sunk at her berth by the steamer Belfast. She went down within a few minutes after being struck. The Belfast was but slightly injured.

Th negro Jesse Matson, who murdered Deputy Sheriff Scott Taylor, was captured near Exmoor and lynched by a mob near Pelham, Ala. He was hanged to a tree and his body literally shot to pieces. Matson killed Deputy Taylor near Acton, Ala., following a difficulty over some work the negro had promised to do.

By the accidental discharge of a revolver he was handling, James Chapple, aged 19, son of a farmer living near Bristol, Tenn., was killed, the ball entering his breast and lodging near the heart. The youth hurried down the stairway, falling dead in his mothers' arms.

NOTES FROM NATION'S CAPITAL. Diplomats at Washington conversant with far Eastern questions can not speak of China without being conscious of the anti-foreign feeling in many parts of the great empire. It seems to them that another great anti-foreign uprising is gathering in the empire, which may become even more formidable than the Boxer revolution. When these diplomats are challenged to produce evidence of the vast unrest in China they point to the anti-foreign feeling in Chang Sha, the cancellation of contracts with foreigners, the refusal to grant further concessions, and, further, the uncompromising attitude toward foreigners assumed by Chinese officials recently.

Robed in a white lace gown that cost $15,000, Miss Mathilde Townsend, one of the best known girls in Washington's smart set, daughter of Mrs. May Scott Townsend, was married to Peter Goelet Gerry, of New York, son of Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry, of New York. President and Mrs. Taft and Vice-President and Mrs. Sherman headed the guests at the bridal ceremony.

President Tast has sent to the senate nominations including the following: United States judge, eastern Texas, Gordon Russell. Mr. Russell was formerly a Georgian, and resided at Dalton, prior to his successful career in Texas.

J. C. Napier, said to be one of the most prominent negroes financially in the South, of Nashville, Tenn., was tendered a diplomatic appointment by President Taft. He declined. Just what the position was has not been announced.

Supporters of the bill to provide for an issue of $30,000,000 in certificates of indebtedness to complete reclamation projects, announced that they would try to place it as a "rider" on the administration land withdrawal bill.

The Cummins amendment to the railroad bill prohibiting the increasing of rates by railroads until they have been declared by the interstate commerce commission to be just and reasonable, was defeated by the senate by a vote of 39 to 42.

TO CARRY PINS IN POCKET

Handy Cushion That Will Fit Handbag, Purse, or Other Small Receptacle.

Just for carrying a few pins in the pocket or handbag, there is nothing more convenient than a little cushion such as this. It is made of two heart-shaped pieces of cardboard, measuring 2½ inch across the widest part from A to A.

The card is first covered with a thin layer of wadding, then with some pretty piece of silk embroidered with the monogram of the owner, or even an initial letter, the opposite side might have just a little spray of flowers worked on it, or might be in fancy silk of some kind.

Fit the silk over the wadding-covered card by lacing it across the back from edge to edge with a needle and cotton. Cut up a little wool into half-inch lengths or less, and make a little padding between the card; it should not be more than a third-of-an-inch thick, or, if preferred, it may be left out altogether. Work buttonhole round the edge of card, and seam the two together by the buttonhole. Another and simpler plan is not to work the buttonhole, but just to seam the edges of silk together. The pins are, of course, stuck in round the edges between the two layers of card.

Watering Plants.

Wrong Watering—All plants like to have their leaves sprinkled, but to sprinkle the soil about them as a means of giving the roots a drink does very little good, and a thorough soaking once a week is infinitely better than a slight daily wetting. When flowers or vines are planted near a house they are in especial danger of suffering from lack of water and should have much more than in other situations. Among the plants which are heavy drinkers are dahlias, heliotrope forget-me-nots, Japanese iris. Nasturtiums and poppies both will starve and go thirsty contentedly, only blooming the better.—Harper's Bazar.

Peat Not Good Fuel.

Experiments made last year on the Swedish railroads in regard to the possibility of employing peat as a fuel for locomotives of various types have not given the results which were hoped for. On the contrary, they show that the locomotives now in use are not suitable for the employment of peat, unless this is mixed with a large proportion of other fuel. In consequence of these results, the engineers of the Swedish government railways are engaged in designing locomotives better adapted for the combustion of peat and with these locomotives the experiments will be continued.

HAVE FOUND FAVOR

UNTRIMMED HATS MEET WITH APPROVAL.

Undoubtedly Thoroughly Adapted for the Individualist in Dress—Must Be the Work of an Artist to Be Perfection.

What is known as the untrimmed hat is gaining more approval than one thought it would. The argument was that the very material out of which it was made was trimming enough in the winter, but as soon as straw made its way into headgear that the lack of trimming would be too severe to be acceptable.

Facts have proved otherwise. It is true that the straw shapes are not absolutely untrimmed, but neither were the winter ones. There is the same heavy cord around the crown with its bow and ends at the side, and the same two or four ornamental hat pins, writes Anne Rittenhouse in the New York Times.

Really, when one considers how very large the average hat pin is, and how conspicuous is the size of the hat of the day, it does not seem necessary to put more ornament on it. In the mind of the amateur the lack of trimming might suggest that the hat would cost less money. On the contrary, about $15 is added to the price of the hat as a charge for its bravado in going about undecorated.

Two hats were placed side by side in a smart milliner's establishment. One had a few orchids on it and a scarf of violet satin, and the edge of the brim was faced with a half-inch of black velvet. Price, $25. The other hat was of black chip without a velvet facing, without orchids, with scarf. Around its crown was a silk military cord tied at the side. Prince, $35. And the hat pins that were offered with it were $16 extra, at $4 apiece.

The individualist in dress prefers the untrimmed hat. She likes its bravado, and when she is an artist she insists that it is the only kind of hat we should wear. She will tell you in detail why it is worth more than the trimmed hat, just as a plain frock is often worth more than a trimmed coat suit.

It is because it must be cut by an artist to be wearable. There is no way to conceal an error; no way to hide a defect. Every thousandth part of an inch must be perfection, and all the inches, perfect in themselves, must maintain a perfect relation to each other.

She will also tell you that the straw must be of the very best. It cannot be tossed out of a machine in the day's work and sold over the counter at a moderate price. It must be the perfection of straw weaving. There must not be a knot or a bad juncture in the whole surface. For these things one must pay just as one always pays for perfection.

Cannibalism Not Stamped Out.

Cannibalism is still practised in the island of Ambrym, in the New Hebrides, where, early last month, a chief having died, the people seized his wives, butchered, cooked and ate them.

CARRING CORN AND TOMATOES

Supply in Middle West Hardly Sufficient to Furnish City Markets With All They Demand.

(By F. L. DUTTON.)

Canners in the middle west are finding it difficult to interest farmers in growing contracts for sweet corn and tomatoes. It takes higher prices than last season to get acreage contracts out, and the packers are in no position to offer greatly increased pay for fruit and vegetables to can; there has been only very little profit in canning tomatoes and some other vegetables the last two seasons.

The average yield per acre in the state of Indiana of sweet corn for canning purposes for the past two years is less than two tons to the acre. This season the packers of this state are obliged to pay a general advance of $1 per ton or more for their sweet corn contracts over last year. This seemingly slight advance means an actual increase in the cost of raw material of 2 cents per dozen and acreage is being signed so slowly that it is questionable in my mind whether many packers in this section will be able to finally secure sufficient acreage to even protect the operating expenses of their plants this year.

Outside of the extra profit the farmer or grower is able to realize in growing commercial grain and raising live stock at this time—a most important feature from his standpoint—is the great risk that he incurs in producing our commodities if unseasonable or abnormal weather conditions prevail to any extent during the growing period, or sudden climatic changes occur, all of which have serious effect on the growing crops of sweet corn, peas and tomatoes, and often the result of his efforts is wiped out completely, whereas Providence has wisely provided commercial grains with a hardiness sufficient to successfully withstand these uncertain and frequent conditions.

This one phase of the matter has a strong influence over the farmer, and he reasons that it is time enough for him to go back to producing for the canning factories when other conditions are much worse than they are today or will be this season. The farmer is a well posted man and it does not take him long to figure out the prospective results from season to season with the amount of information which he has at hand, and so far as I am concerned I can see but one thing ahead of us and that is higher prices on staple canned goods, at least for the coming season.

Care of Eyebrow.

The skin beneath the eyebrows needs daily attention. One frequently sees a dry, scaly condition here, similar to dandruff of the scalp—and indeed it is the same thing—and here and there tiny bald patches. Crude petroleum rubbed well into them at night will relieve the scaliness and promote the growth of hair. A tiny brow brush should be on every one's toilet table, and used daily; it imparts luster to the brows and keeps them in good condition.

Woman's Great Id

is how to make herself attractive. But without health it is hard for her to be lovely in face, form or temper. A weak, sickly woman will be nervous and irritable. Constipation and Kidney poisons show in pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. But E'ect ic Bitters always prove a godsend to women who want health, beauty and friends. They regulate Stomach, Liver and Kidneys, purify the blood; give strong nerves, bright eyes, pure breath, smooth, velvety skin, lovely complexion, good health. Try them. 50c at Upchurch Drug Co.

PICTURE BOOK FOR NURSERY

Will Enliven Many Otherwise Dull Hours on an Unpleasant or Rainy Day.

The mother with a nursery wants to get those linen picture books that are to be embroidered.

Sheets of linen are folded in such a way that they need only to be stitched on one side. The ends are turned back and stitched down on the book or the book may be bound with white or colored linen tape.

The cover is stamped with the title "Nursery Rhymes" or "Illustrated Alphabet," and the different pages are appropriate figures and letters to be worked in outline stitch in mercerized cotton.

Use a heavy cotton and the gayest possible colors that will wash. The larger figures can be done in long and short stitch.

Such a book will not tear, may be made vivid enough to catch a child's fancy, and will launder well.

The girl who can draw may originate designs on linen for it. Cut into strips eight or ten inches long and fold like a fan into five inch folds. Stitch at back through all these folds after the outlining is worked. The embroidery is done on both sides. This does away with hemming each separate sheet or book.

Tan Hat With Black Lace.

If you have a tan straw hat left from last year and it is a little too faded for wear as it is, cover it with dotted black lace, trim with a wreath of roses and you will have a "new Paris creation." This is a fact. A hat made by a milliner, well known for the beauty of her models, is a tan straw covered, upper and under side, with black lace and with a wreath of tiny pink roses arranged around the crown. The lace is drawn tight over the under side of the brim, like a facing, and bunched loosely over the crown. The wreath is placed rather low, resting partly on the crown and partly on the brim.

After La Grippe

"I had suffered several weeks with LaGrippe. Had pains in my head and eyes. It felt as though there was a heavy weight on the top of my head, until it seemed that my brain would burst. I was so nervous that I could not rest or sleep. When I dozed off I would awake with a sudden jerking of my whole body. Dr. Miles' Nervine, Heart Remedy and Nerve and Liver Pills cured me. A number of friends have since realized the same benefits."

MRS. ALVIN H. LOCKS,
Seabrook, N. H.

The after effects of LaGrippe are often more serious than the disease, as it leaves the system in a weakened condition that invites more serious troubles, such as pneumonia, etc.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine should be taken for some time to thoroughly restore nerve strength.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold by all druggists. If the first bottle does not benefit, your druggist will return your money.

The son says: "My father and mother owe their present strength and good health to Vinol. During the last two trying winters neither of them had a cold, and were able to walk farther and do more than for years. I think Vinol is perfectly wonderful. The Republicans of Calhoun county met in convention at Anniston last Saturday and amongst other business indorsed the candidacy of L. H. Reynolds of Chilton county for representative from the Fourth congressional district to oppose Fred L. Blackmon, Democrat, and nominated F. D. Noble, of Anniston for State Senator in opposition to T. A. Curry of Chilton

Reports from correspondents of The Commercial Appeal, under date of May 25, show that the acreage planted to cotton this spring exceeds that planted in 1909 about 3.3 per cent. It is estimated that 88 per cent of the total area had come up to a stand on this date, planting, except in isolated instances, being completed.

Between May 14 and May 21 rains fell in all cotton producing territory, and were highly beneficial, although accompanied by abnormal temperatures. What is needed now is warm, dry weather.

The land was prepared well, and correspondents are of the opinion that the crop will grow very rapidly with warm weather, the moisture supply for the present being abundant. In all districts the crop improved materially during the week preceding May 25.

The cold weather of late April necessitated considerable replanting in the Atlantic states, Alabama and Louisiana, but this has been completed, and most of the cotton is up, although in these states there are a few complaints of irregular stands.

In states east of the Mississippi river there has been an increase in area planted to corn and a larger use of commercial fertilizers.

Askew Sues For $1,800 Salary

D. D. Askew, of Wetumpka, Solicitor of the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit, claims that the State of Alabama owes him $1,800. He filed a petition Saturday, with Judge Pearson of the Circuit Court, for a mandamus directing State Auditor W. W. Brandon to pay the amount which he claims.

Solicitor Askew has been in office for three years, and during that time has drawn salary at the rate of $150 a month. Solicitors of the fifteen other districts of the State have been paid $200 a month, under the general law, and Solicitor Askew contends that the special act fixing his salary is unconstitutional, by reason of errors in the journals of the Legislature which passed it.

Assistant Attorney General T. W. Martin, for the State, waived process on the State Auditor Saturday, and the case will be submitted to Judge Pearson on briefs.

NEWSPAPERS MUST OBEY.

Seventeen publishers have been served with citations to appear in Washington and the privilege of second class pound rates has been withdrawn so far from two papers As we have frequently explained, the rule provides that subscriptions to weekly newspapers, twelve months in arrears, will be denied pound rates. Subscribers must pay the subscription price before the end of the year. A special agent has been investigating in Iowa, and in all probability Wisconsin will be investigated next. So the subscriber who is a year in arrears and finds his paper stopped after due notification, should not get upon his hind legs and howl, or go through some other form of silliness because the publisher will not risk the ruination of his business.—Kendall (Wis.) ASK FOR FREE EGGS

Offer of Kansas College Brings a Deluge of Requests.

"Something-for-Nothing" Spirit Is Awakened by Effort of Agricultural College to Improve Grade of Poultry of State.

Manhattan, Kan.—When the poultry department of the Kansas State Agricultural college made the offer of free settings of eggs to the farmers of Kansas it never dreamed of the consequences that this offer has brought.

The offer was made by a little notice in the newspapers to the effect that "the poultry department of the agricultural college is desirous of sending out over the state eggs from pure bred poultry free of charge. Anyone wishing to take advantage of this opportunity to add some pure bred stock to his present flock should address the poultry department, Kansas State Agricultural college."

Now, that little notice appeared in the newspapers about the time the price of eggs was soaring around the highest pinnacle, and consequently it was read by every one who reads newspapers, especially as the editors made it conspicuous by placing it under headlines like "What! Eggs Free of Charge?" or "K. S. A. C. Giving Away Eggs," etc.

The ink of the press notices was hardly dry before the inquiries began pouring in to the poultry department concerning those "free eggs."

From all over the state at first the letters arrived, and later this onslaught of questioning missives from Kansas was added to from Oklahoma, Texas, Missouri, Colorado and other states. It became a national affair.

The letters arrived at the rate of about 500 a day. Finally, as the number of inquiries rapidly approached the 4,000 mark, and as hundreds were arriving every day, the philanthropic department, realizing that it would be almost impossible to even answer so many letters and certainly impossible to supply so many farmers with eggs, hurried off dispatches to the newspapers, stating that the department was swamped with requests for free settings and requesting that no more inquiries be sent in.

The object of the department in making this offer was threefold: First, to give the farmers a chance to get a start with pure-bred chickens; second, to enlarge the college flock, and third, to get the names of the farmers who are interested in poultry raising.

The desire to get a list of farmers interested in poultry raising certainly has been satisfied, and the prospects for the realization of the other objects are bright.

Six stenographers attacked the pile of letters and postal cards, and for several days were busy with these interrogations. The universal question was, "How can we get them?" and the department answered this by sending out 2,500 replies stating the conditions under which the free eggs would be sent out.

It was impossible to answer more queries except by postal cards telling them that their requests had been received too late. Farmers who already have good pure stock will not be supplied. Here are the conditions that the farmer must agree to before the eggs will be sent to him:

The farmer must agree to keep a record of the fertility and hatchability of the eggs, and give one chicken out of every four raised to September 1 to the college.

The majority of the letters received were from farmers who wanted to get free eggs for the purpose of improving the stock of their flock, but many of those who wrote were merely curious and showed a "something for nothing" spirit.

USE GASOLINE LIKE COCAINE

School Boys Are Charged With Sniffing Fumes and Being Overcome—Habit Is Attacked.

Philadelphia.—Magistrate Gallagher, sitting in the house of detention, was told that the boys in the southern section of the city had contracted the habit of snuffing gasoline in much the same way that cocaine is used. Two youthful snuffers were taken into court later, and it was testified that they had been found intoxicated in the streets after inhaling gasoline fumes.

The lads were Timothy O'Shea, 13 years old, and William North, 12 years old, of Twenty-first and Tasker streets. They had been found semi-conscious. The testimony showed that they had saturated sponges with gasoline taken from lamps in the neighborhood. They were held in $400 bail each for the juvenile court.

According to Miss M. Stanford, matron at the house of detention, the gasoline habit has been contracted by many schoolboys.

Discovers Viking Boat.

London.—What is declared to be a viking boat has been unearthed on a farm near Warboys, Huntingdonshire. The boat is flat bottomed, and was dug out of a great oak boll. It is 37 feet long, three feet nine inches wide at the stern, and 15 inches deep. Its age is estimated at 2,000 years, and it is evident that the Fen viking had left it in a creek when the incoming sea overwhelmed it. A piece of wood on the prow is stated to be the raven's head, the charm of the vikings.

Dr. Rainsford on the Lay Movement in Missions

The missionary movement of the future must be the going forth to the field, the home, the foreign field, not of driblets of ordained priests, deacons, Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, or Protestants, but of the Christian manhood and womanhood of the Christian nations. It must mean the inspiring of all of us to higher, holier, more self-sacrificing endeavor. Men and women must be found in tens of thousands who will be willing to forego much of the comfort of life, many of those things we value most, in order to uplift and educate the weak and hopeless people of the earth; while a still larger multitude, equally inspired, shall grapple with the evils that lie at our very doors. To some from foreign lands sounds the call. To others, the problems presented by the child at the door seem of first importance. Both are equally missionaries. The future maintenance of civilization itself depends on Christian success in both fields. But once for all, taking heart at this movement which has come to us, let us cast aside forever the idea that the specially educated groups of men and women, priests or ministers, sisters or deaconesses, can grapple with this thing. Nor, of course, will money do it. If these laymen could command a million dollars for one hundred dollars that they have raised, the money would not meet the occasion. A going forth of Christian civilization to the uncivilized is what is wanted. The men and women on the ground have done nobly. They are waiting for the large forces, promised by such movements as these.

Ecclesiasticism of one sort or another has ruled the councils of the church long enough. These laymen are knocking at its council doors now; but they are entering on a campaign, the result of which cannot fail to supply them with so exact and intimate a knowledge of the condition to be met by Christian missionaries both at home and abroad that, having it, they cannot be excused from the church's councils. This presence cannot fail to bring new courage on the battle line, new resources and wisdom in the council chambers. They will greatly add to the churches' missionary resources. They will surely do away with much of the churchly red tape.—From "Getting Together for Missions," by W. S. Rainsford, D. D., in the American Review of Reviews for June.

Lost Memory Recovered by a Fall.

A curious instance of loss of memory occurred in the case of Mr. J. Temple, a well-known Driffield merchant. While in London in February of last year he suddenly disappeared, and by some means he reached New South Wales. He was riding on a wagon there recently when the horses started suddenly, and he was thrown off, sustaining a severe smash on the head. After lying unconscious for three days he recovered, and then remembered who he was. He at once wrote to his friends, and is now on his way home.

New Foe to Typhoid Fever.

A Cape Colony (South Africa) doctor has recently been experimenting with a new drug in the treatment of typhoid fever. It is an extract of the plant called monsonia biflora, and contains, besides tannic and gallic acid, an active principle or principles which Dr. Maberly has named entericin. The results of the doctor's experiments seem to indicate that entericin may be a useful remedy in typhoid, but his cases have been too few to justify any definite conclusions.

Lincoln Cigar Box Brings $125.

At a recent sale in London of the effects of the late Lionel Brough, the comedian, who died last November, a cigar box of Sheffield plate decorated with bacchanal subjects fetched $125. The lid is inscribed:

"Presented by Abraham Lincoln, president of the United States, to Professor Andersen as a mark of appreciation of his talent, displayed at the White House in 1863."

Value of Machine Guns.

The value of machine guns was first exemplified in the Franco-Prussian war, the Boer was in South Africa confirmed the conclusions of the tacticians, and the Russian-Japanese war proved the correctness of their views. Since then all European nations have made machine gun batteries an essential part of their organization.

The Land of Opportunity—Who Shall Possess It?

Recognition of the fact that the South is a land of wonderful opportunity—indeed, to the farmer, the land of opportunity—is becoming general. About a year ago Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson told the Editor of The Progressive Farmer and Gazette, that with good farming average Southern lands would be worth $100 an acre in six or seven years. We have printed, too, the conviction of a leading Iowa stockman that the South is the live stock country of the future. It has not been long since Collier's Weekly spoke of the South as "The next West." Better still, Southern farmers are themselves coming to realize undreamed-of possibilities in the land which they own. Big corn crops have become so common as to attract little attention, unless they are very big. Indeed, when 500 boys in one country average 70 bushels of corn to the acre, it is evident that the South is, as we have said, the real Corn Belt. Two bales of cotton to the acre is now recognized as an attainable ideal, and some men make more. Men are making hogs in the South for three or four cents a pound and selling them for 10 cents or more.

Yes, the South is the land of opportunity for the alert, intelligent, progressive farmer. All over it there are waiting golden opportunities for such farmers to acquire wealth and to do their part in making this land of ours what it should be—the fairest and most fruitful farming section in America.

The one great question of to-day is: "Who is going to profit by these opportunities?" Who should profit by them admits of no question. They rightfully belong to the farmers who are now tending Southern soils, and to their sons. If these farmers and farm boys neglect their rightful heritage, and do not bring to their farm work the trained mind and the earnest purpose which are necessary to success in any work, we may depend upon it that the people from other sections will come and profit by the opportunities, which they neglect. Now, we are glad to see people coming from other sections, because the South needs them. But what we wish to see, above all else, is an awakening of the farmers who belong in the South to the possibilities that lie latent in their soils—to see them about studying the science of agriculture, improving their methods, taking a deeper interest in their works and so getting their rightful share of the wealth that good farming in the South is sure to produce. So to every reader we would make this appeal: Begin right now to do better farming, to get better stock and tools, to make each day's labor count for more, to plant better seeds, to prepare the soil better and cultivate the crops more thoroughly; above all, to build up your soil and keep it fertile.

For those who will do these things there are waiting splendid opportunities and wonderful rewards.

Men and boys of the South today, will you improve these opportunities and get your share of these rewards, or will you go on in half-hearted fashion and leave them to others?—Starkville (Miss.) Progressive Farmer and Gazette.

What a Summer Cold May Do

Costly Depredations of Wolves.

According to C. Hart Merriam, chief of the biological survey, the increasing ravages of wolves is to be added to the many other leakages of American wealth. In the northwest last year, he says, the depredations amounted to $13,000,000 in value of property destroyed. This is a large sum to set down as absolute loss occasioned by one species of wild animal alone in a country of rapidly increasing population, when the land has so been taken up that it has been supposed that wild animals of all sorts had been changed from menaces to life and property into objects of sport for the hunter. It is astonishing that wolves should have so rapidly increased of late in the northwest, a region which has rapidly been developed, and that such an energetic race as the settlers there should have allowed this increase.—New York Press.

Editor Banner:—Whatever may be said of Judge Reynolds, whether true or untrue, there is one thing that all will agree upon, and that is, he is a past master in the art of dodging issues and mistaking facts, and for monumental gall, he comes under the wire a quarter ahead of the famous government mule. He writes to Judge Brewer and tells him just what the facts were, and then says to the Judge, "I would thank you very much to write me a letter stating the facts as above in order that I may have your answer published." But he is welcome to all the benefits that he can get out of Judge Brewer's reply, who states "I do not remember the facts about the case you mention." Judge Reynolds wrote Judge Brewer that during the trial of the case Solicitor Bowling sent for him and placed him upon the witness stand, but he failed to state to Judge Brewer that a few minutes before, he voluntarily informed Mr. Bowling that he would testify that Littleton was the man who appeared before him to plead guilty. In every other statement made by Judge Reynolds in this letter to Judge Brewer, the facts were not correctly stated. It is a fact that Mr. Curry asked Judge Reynolds more times than one if he was not mistaken as to Littleton being the man who appeared before him to plead guilty, and each time Judge Reynolds replied that he was positively not mistaken. Mr. Curry was Littleton's attorney, and what business did Judge Reynolds have "bulling in" asking for a new trial for Littleton? But this seems to be a custom with him, as this is not the only time that he has left the office to which the people have elected him and "bulled in" where had no business. As another instance of the many times he has "bulled in," I will mention the time when he volunteered his services to Solicitor Askew, and directed him to allow Mr. B. N. Martin and other good citizens of this county to sit on the jury. You say in your letter that you went to Judge Brewer and told him that you were afraid that your testimony would prejudice the cause of Mr. Littleton, and that you were dissatisfied, this statement, in your behalf, shows conclusively that you were conscious of having done this boy an injustice, and for this reason I called upon you in my first letter to make it good to him, which you in your letter to the people agreed to do. If any two gentlemen, or two hundred gentlemen ever went to you and stated that if you would refund his money I would support you in the coming primary, they did so without my knowledge or consent, and certainly against my wishes you may be able to buy, trade or traffic with some of the voters of Chilton county, but you cannot buy, trade or traffic with my vote for the $65 57 mentioned, nor any other amount. As for my being with a pretended Republican, will say you know this to be untrue, otherwise I would have been with you. From your political history, especially since you made your acquaintance with Gov. Comer, you are the only pretended Republican in the county. You complain, Judge, of my writing so many letters against you; I have written only two besides this. One was about Comer and his crowd being in the court house and the taxpayers of the county having to stand in the streets to hear their speakers on that great public question. I made no mention of your name in that letter—Comer was called and you have answered. My second letter was about the Littleton matter, and you tried to answer it but failed. You say that there is a great deal being said about who will stand by the party; I have stood by it all my life, but as this is the first time that you have been announced for office as a Republican, it remains to be seen whether or not you will stand by the party.

Respectfully,
J. M. MAHAN.

Soared Into Sound Health.

Mr. B. F. Kelley Springfield, Ill., writes: "A year ago I began to be troubled with my kidneys and bladder, which grew worse until I became alarmed at my condition. I also suffered with dull heavy headaches and the action of my bladder was annoying and painful. I read of Foley Kidney Pill and after taking them a few weeks the headaches left me, the action of my bladder was again normal, and I was free of all distress." For sale by Upchurch Drug Co.

The Summer Garden.

The most difficult time to keep the garden border looking well is during the months of August and September, when in dry season, especially, the plants begin to look rather ragged and the border lacking in bloom.

Close attention to the removal of flowers which have withered and to flower stalks will improve the appearance of the border and will encourage later bloom on plants which have already flowered, but there should be some late blooming perennials which can be scattered pretty freely through the border, and which will not take up much room. One of the most satisfactory of such plants is Lilium Speciosum, which blooms well through September. Another desirable plant grown readily from seed, and requiring little room, is the purple cone flower (Echinacea Purpurea), which also blooms until severe frosts.

The new cow has an individuality of her own and the feeder should become acquainted with her as soon as possible after she is brought into the herd.

Walnut Stain.

Walnut juice is a harmless vegetable stain for the hair. It is made by boiling an ounce of the hulls gently in a pint of water for an hour and adding a piece of alum as large as a hazelnut to fix the dye. The hair should be carefully washed and dried some hours before the dye is used. This is necessary to remove all traces of oil, which otherwise would protect the hair from the action of the dye and cause it to set unevenly.

CLANTON, ALA.

Cupid Springs a Surprise

By Olive Roberts Burton

Mrs. Smithson had a strong sense of duty and no sense of humor. She looked sternly through her lorgnon at the paper she held. "Um, yes! I thought it was Alice's turn, Alice Theresa—the Theresa was for her—Sherman," she read slowly, "June 11th! Good gracious—why, that's tomorrow. I shall have to make the greatest haste. I had no idea it was so near."

Mrs. Smithson religiously remembered "Brother Jim's nine" on their birthdays and she always sent useful things the family could use. June 4 years old, received a box of laundry soap and Joseph just cutting his sixth tooth was overjoyed at sight of the latest thing in incubators. Harry, a child of ten, went wild over 50 yards of blue calico; and Irene, a maid of 15, drew a year's supply of salt mackerel. Each child dutifully sent a letter of thanks—the young ones by proxy—each letter Mrs. Smithson put away, another stone in her monument to duty.

Huntley Brown had visited at the Smithsons' often enough to know about "Brother Jim's nine." He knew, too, about the birthdays and some way he couldn't help feeling sorry for 19-year-old Alice when at dinner that evening Mrs. Smithson informed the family that she had bought her a beautiful little gasoline stove. "It will be so nice for her mother this hot weather. I have no doubt she cooks on a regular locomotive—all country people do—and this will be such a blessing." Then a maid came in.

"A telephone message just came, ma'am,' said the girl, "that the stove you bought today can't be sent because—"

But Mrs. Smithson was already at the phone. She soon reappeared, the picture of distress. "The store is closed and the express company says they cannot deliver it tomorrow if they do not get it now. Oh, dear, it must get there tomorrow!" Mrs. Smithson was strong on punctuality.

Then Huntley Brown came to the rescue. "I say, Aunt Theresa, I've got a corking scheme. I am going out to Bob Murray's tomorrow in my car. He and his sister are having a week-end party, you know, and it's out that way. I am taking some of the boys and I can hitch the stove on some way and take it along, too."

"How delightful," exclaimed his aunt.

"And I can pay my respects to sweet Alice, whom I have never seen, and the family, also, present them—her—with the stove, wish them—her—many happy returns and never miss the time."

And so it was settled. When Huntley and his companions came into view in the big red car a shout greeted them. The men and girls in white looked good to the dusty young fellows. Some were on the lawn and a few were on the cool wide porch drinking lemonade. The young men were soon the center of a happy, noisy crowd.

Then two girls with tennis racquets came arm in arm around the house and hurried forward when they saw the newcomers.

Bob's sister was one, and presented each in turn to the other girl. "Alice, I want you to meet Mr. Brown. Miss Sherman, Huntley." Huntley Brown took the proffered hand gently in his great brown one. It looked so small and white; and when she raised her merry brown eyes to his, he almost forgot to release it at all. She kept on smiling at him. It seemed as if he could never look away.

Then, suddenly, something cold crept slowly up his spine till it clutched at his throat and his voice left. He stammered and stopped, and his nerveless hand let hers drop. The name! Alice Sherman! There could not be two. But this girl — this finely groomed, beautiful girl—surely she could not be one of "Brother Jim's nine." She was not the girl that—

"Would you mind," he asked, "telling me your middle name?"

"Theresa," she answered. Then somebody yelled at Huntley while some one else hammered on the box. "This your trunk, Huntley?"

"No—it's a box for a—a gentleman down the road."

"Yes—we didn't think it was a turtle, but the world is so full of a number of things—what's inside, Hunt? Go on and tell us."

"Cabbages!" he snapped. "Where's the garage?" He started the car around the house. The girl with brown eyes looked oddly after him, then with a delicious little laugh she turned and went up the steps with the others.

It was clear to Huntley now. His aunt, or rather his uncle's wife, was too busy with church, clubs and social duties to make the acquaintance of her brother's family. She had allowed them to grow up—and rich—without any effort to know them, except by sending ridiculous presents, because they lived in the country. "Lord—they probably live in a palace," he groaned. "And me with a cook stove for a birthday gift for that little queen out there." A dull red covered his face and then paled when he thought of the brown eyes raised so frankly—so merrily to his.

Huntley did not deliver the stove that day. The box—four young men were walking lame from taking turns draping their legs about it in the tonneau—still stood peacefully in the car.

Huntley took Alice in to dinner that night. Bob Murray saw to that. They had been together almost every second since the young man's arrival, and as he said to his sister: "Hunt's in the race already, sis, give him clear track. I'd like to see him win."

But when someone proposed a toast to Alice, his heaven fell. If only he could forget that confounded stove. Who ever heard of sending a stove for a birthday present, anyway?

He sat silent for awhile and Alice looked at him with the same odd smile that had followed him in the morning. A question trembled on her lips for the hundredth time, but died unuttered. She longed to say: "Didn't Aunt Theresa send me any birthday gift?" but some fine instinct, Huntley's discomfiture when her birthday was mentioned, or someone joking about the big box, kept her quiet.

And when Huntley came out of his brown study and looked down at the pretty girl beside him, she looked up brightly and spoke of something else. But she noticed the fierce light of determination in his eyes.

He got away as soon after dinner as he could without being noticed. Without waiting to get cap or ulster he slipped around the house to the garage, keeping in the shadow of the trees. The moon was full and the air was heavy with roses. Only fear of what the morrow might bring kept him to his purpose. What a night to be wasting on a fool's errand when he migth be strolling through the garden with the sweetest, dearest girl he had ever met. The moon and the roses were going to his head, when the box and its clumsy contents appeared like a specter. He could not sleep with that haunting him. What if they found him out? How they would laugh! And what would Alice think?

"Well, I won't be the goat if I know it," and he made a dash for the big door. "I'll ditch that stove or—" The door slid back at his touch and the moon streamed into the vault-like blackness of the shed. The silent motors looked like sleeping monsters in the half light. Huntley found his car, turned on the lamps and started to jump to the driver's seat when he heard a delicate laugh from the tonneau and the dearest girl in the world was looking at him round the corner of the big rough box.

"You see, Mr. Brown, I came out for my birthday gift. I am sure this is it, and I was afraid you had forgotten about it. It will save you a trip, too, if you give it to me now. I suppose you had orders to take it home, but it is ten miles to father's, and I can take it in my own car when I leave. That's mine there—the white one." Then very innocently: "What is in it—a washing machine or—or cabbages?"

"Oh, Lord—it's worse. It's a gasoline cook stove. I was just going to dump it into the nearest frog pond."

Alice slipped from the car and held out her hand. "Oh, no, please don't. I—I should just love a stove—really. And if you will wait till morning I'll go around with you."

Huntley took the little hand and forgot as usual to let go. "And I am forgiven for being such a dummy? I do not deserve it."

Alice drew him toward the door. "Don't let us talk of stoves. Look at the moon and—and smell!" She drew a deep breath of the perfumed air. And hand in hand they wandered toward the garden, without a thought of the wasted acetylene and the open door behind them.

Overdoing It.

He sighed heavily.

"Yes," he said, "when I was young and poor it was my fondest ambition to have enough money to dress like the young men in the clothiers' fashion plates, wearing this and that for stated occasions and never daring to wear anything different."

"Well, your ambition was gratified," said the bystander.

"It was" responded the first speaker. "I'm so rich now that I can wear anything I please."

And he sighed again.

Two Losses.

Tittsworth—Hello, old man! What's the trouble? You look as if you had just come from a bluing factory.

Skinner—I feel that way, too. I've just lost $5.25.

Tittsworth—Lost it? How?

Skinner—The quarter dropped through a hole in my pocket and I let Holders borrow the five.—Exchange.

GERMAN DRESS IS CRITICIZED

Reputation for Simplicity Compared Unfavorably With Other Nations —Faith in Silk.

Berlin.—The reputation of the German woman for simplicity of living and dressing has caused her to be compared unfavorably with her sisters of Paris, New York and London. There is general agreement that she has deserved her reputation, but there is no less general agreement that of late years she has changed her standard of dress and has become more ambitious.

A critic who has recently been studying dress in Berlin still finds much to be dissatisfied with. The progress is not inclusive enough. Women in the upper classes have vastly improved in their knowledge of dress and the application of their knowledge with elegance and taste.

Actresses are now costumed in a way that makes the German street scene far more attractive and pleasing than it was a dozen years ago. But there is an enormous number of women who recognize taste and elegance when they see such qualities in feminine costumes, but from motives of tradition and economy, chiefly the latter, steadily refuse to change their fashion of attire.

These women, in age from forty to sixty, usually pin their faith to silk, and the older the silk is the better. It is this clinging to tradition that gives so many theater audiences in Germany their look of commonplaceness, not to say untidiness. This class of German woman, the critic says, is almost equally criminal in her attitude toward the crown of a woman's getup, the hat.

FAMILY CAT CATCHES MUMPS

Animal Now at Large and Health Authorities Fear Epidemic Among Tabbies of City.

Norwood, Pa.—Mumps have become such an epidemic in this borough that the authorities are trying to locate a family pet in the shape of a large cat, with wide stripes around its body, the pet of a family where the mumps had prevailed, and the recipient of the milk and toast that the patient would not eat. The result is that the cat has the mumps, and is now running at large.

For several days the board of health inspector has tried hard to catch that cat. He said he did get a look at him, and he was the greatest sight a man ever saw—a cat with a couple of good-sized hickory nuts, one on each of its jowls, and sitting on a fence, emitting unearthly screeches. He tried to move toward him slowly and carefully, but the cat saw him, and was off like a streak.

One of the leading physicians in the borough said that such a thing was possible as a cat having the mumps, although it might not be known as that, and there was danger of other domestic pets catching the disease. The inspector says he is going to keep on the job until that cat is in his net, and in the meantime he suggests to pet owners that they keep their animals at home.

Busy Making Costumes.

Women and girls in Oberammergau have been busy for the last two years in making new costumes for the actors who are to take part in the Passion play this year. Three hundred years ago the villagers were saved from a pest, and made a vow to have the play representing the birth and resurrection of the Savior as a remembrance of the good that came to them. Maria Meyer is the "Mary Magdalene" of the play and Ottilie Zwing the "Virgin Mary."

New Stereo Invention.

Interest among printers has been aroused over the daily use by the Pittsburg Press of a dry matrix process by which steam tables are entirely eliminated from the process and methods in the mechanical department practically revolutionized.

Mild Laxative for Baby Free

The child of today is the parent of the future, and whether it grows up healthy and strong, or puny and weak, depends upon the intelligence of its parents, for most children are born into the world healthy, but thousands become future weaklings between birth and the age of ten, when the parents are still in greatest control.

The prime cause of trouble is in the stomach. A baby that is digesting its food seldom cries and always looks cheerful; the little child whose stomach is good romps and plays and never whines; the growing child learns well at school and is eager for fun if its head is clear and its stomach light, and that means if it has no constipation.

The best and safest way to cure any irregularity of the stomach and bowels in children is by the use of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. This is a liquid laxative wonderful in its effect as Mrs. John W. Dunham, Apple Creek, O., Mrs. H. L. Cullam, Plainville, Ind., and numerous others can testify who give it to their children with extraordinary results.

A bottle only costs 50 cents or $1 according to the size you want, and even one 50-cent bottle will do a wonderful amount of good in a family. It can be given to any member of the family in constipation, sour stomach, indigestion, torpid liver, dyspepsia, heartburn, sick headache and similar digestive troubles. It never gripes or strangles like pills, tablets, salts and powders, which should not be given to children, women or old folks.

If you have a child or other member of the family who needs, but has never used this grand laxative tonic, send your name and address to the doctor and a free trial bottle will be sent to your home. In this way you can find out what it will do without personal expense.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Bridesmaids.

Bridesmaids are due to brides' recognized need to have about them something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue. For where bridesmaids are at all old it makes them blue to see another girl married, and thus they can be made to serve a double purpose.

Three times a bridesmaid, never a bride, is an old saying, but there's not much to it. Like "thrice armed is he who hath his quarrel just," it is true in theory, but not in business. If a girl means business, in other words, it makes very little difference how many times she has been a bridesmaid. Bridesmaids are not a distinct species. Except that they wear bigger hats, they are much like other girls.—Puck.

Cause of "Keel Water."

The track of smooth water, or "keel water," stretching in the wake of a moving vessel is often noticed, but little understood. The effect is not due to the influence of oil on surface tension, though the stilling of the waves may be similar. Prof. Ashorn, a German investigator, has made some experiments with bodies moving on the water, and these show that the gyroscopic action of the eddies or whirls left behind on each side of the vessel smooth out the smaller waves and give the calm, oil-appearing track that is so familiar. The larger and swifter the ship the longer and broader is the smooth wake.

Marvelous Discoveries

mark the wonderful progress of the age. Air flights on heavy machines, telegrams without wires, terrible war inventions to kill men, and that wonder of wonders—Dr. King's New Discovery—to save life when threatened by coughs, colds, lagrippe, asthma, croup, bronchitis, hemorrhages, hay fever and whooping cough or lung trouble. For all bronchial affections it has no equal. It relieves instantly. Its the surest cure. James M. Black of Ashville, N. C., R. R. Farmers' Educational and Co-Operative Union of America

Matters of Especial Moment to the Progressive Agriculturist

Set the other man an example.

Constant fault-finding never mended anything.

This world is not going to be any better than you are.

Faith and ingenuity often take the place of the hired man.

If you don't do your part how can you expect others to do theirs?

Farmers should raise their own horses instead of buying them.

The less a man knows of himself the more he thinks of himself.

A boy is the only animal that is supposed to thrive on discouragement.

A big barn and a stingy little house are unmistakable signs of an unhappy home life.

Why is it when a young man gets matrimonial cold feet his girl gives him the mitten?

The one thing that we don't care whether a man pays back or not is borrowed trouble.

It is all right to read books and farm papers, but a man can get much solid information by studying his own farm.

Plant crops for soiling. Your work animals and milk cows will need green food this spring. Oats, wheat or rye will serve this purpose. Or plant sorghum, millet or corn.

Instead of increasing the number of acres in cotton, increase the number of animals, and the number of acres planted in forage crops. By doing this you will increase your earning power on the farm.

Now is the time to guard against mosquitoes and flies. Clean up the yard, barn lot and chicken house. Sprinkle quicklime freely over the floors of cellars and chicken house. Drain off all surplus water to prevent mosquitoes.

BOTH SKINNED BY MIDDLEMAN

D. F. Yoakum Tells Farmers How They and Consumer Get Worsted at Hands of Dealer.

Excessive profit taking by middlemen was the reason assigned for high prices of foodstuffs by B. F. Yoakum, chairman of the Frisco system, in an address the other day before the national convention of the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative union at St. Louis.

He declared the heavy reductions in freight rates of the last few years had been absorbed by the dealers, and not shared in by the farmers or consumers.

Better marketing methods were advanced as a means by which farmers could get better prices for the food they raise and at the some time lower figures would be given consumers.

"The most important force for the welfare of the nation will come when the land owners of America are organized," said Mr. Yoakum. "It is not prices received by farmers which make living expenses high, but the profits of the dealers handling the food between the farmer and the consumer.

"The Florida farmer receives $2.25 for a bushel of green peas, the railroad gets 50 cents for the 800-mile haul to New York, and the consumer pays $6.40 for this same bushel of peas. There is 35 per cent. for the grower, eight per cent for the carrier, and 57 per cent. for the dealer. This is not a fair division.

"Thirty cents a dozen was the average price of eggs in New York last year, while the farmers of Arkansas and Missouri received 15 cents. The freight was two cents a dozen. The man who received the eggs at a freight station in New York and delivered them to the consumer take 13 cents a dozen profit.

"The rice farmer of Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas gets 2½ cents a pound for the grain, and the consumer in New York pays ten cents a pound for this rice. The freight is one-half cent a pound. If the rice farmer were paid 3½ cents, and the dealer took a cent profit (which is 25 per cent.), the New York consumer would get 20 pounds of rice for one dollar, instead of ten pounds as now."

To Plant Broomcorn.

Plant your broomcorn as soon as possible. Have the land in a good mellow, lay your rows off three or three and one-half feet apart and if the land does not have good drainage, it may be best to elevate the beds slightly above the level. The seed may be planted with planter with sorghum plates. See that the planter does not drop the seed too deep. If the soil is in good condition from three-fourths to one inch is deep enough.

Feeding Potatoes.

Potatoes fed raw are not so valuable a feed, but cooked, boiled—by steam is a difficult or expensive process—they make a good feed for either fattening or fattening hogs. If the potatoes be mashed after boiling and mixed with chopped corn or crushed corn of any sort, an excellent feed is provided.

Jesus Walks On the Sea

Sunday School Lesson for June 5, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 14:22-33. Memory verses, 31, 32.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Then they that were in the ship came and worshiped him, saying, Of a truth thou art the Son of God."—Matt. 14:33.

TIME.—In the spring of A. D. 28, immediately after the last lesson.

PLACE.—The northern part of the Sea of Galilee.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

The Source of Christ's Power.—Vs. 22, 23. What was the effect upon the multitude of the multiplication of the loaves and fishes? "The feeding of the five thousand was the quietest and least imposing of Christ's miracles. It is safe to say that only a few of the people were aware of what was being done until it was over."—David James Burrell, D. D., LL. D.

The Imperiled Disciples and Christ's Good Cheer.—Vs. 24-27. Why did Christ, if his disciples were to be in so great danger, thrust them forth into it without himself? The danger was not apparent at first. "It was an easy crossing, and it was quite calm, and it was not far; they could see the other side. He separated himself from them with a purpose. He had many a lesson for them to learn. The night became unruly, and no small tempest lay upon them; their bearings were lost, and neither sail nor oar could serve them. Their thoughts must have pressed all and only in one direction—to the mountain-top where Jesus was!"—Rev. Armstrong Black.

When did Jesus come to them in their distress? "In the fourth watch of the night," between three and six o'clock in the morning.

Why did Christ come to them walking on the waves? He must go to them in that way, or not at all. Besides, he doubtless had a desire to lift the disciples' thought of him to a higher plane, and prepare them for the full recognition of his divinity. "The miracle of the feeding of the multitude had been a picture of the last supper, a prophecy of his death; and this miracle is a prophecy of his resurrection."—Rev. David Smith.

How did the apparition affect the disciples? They cried out in great terror, thinking it a ghost. "All at once, in the track that lay behind them, a figure appeared. As it passed onward over the water, seemingly upborne by the waves as they rose, not disappearing as they fell, but carried on as they rolled, the silvery moon laid upon the trembling waters the shadows of that form as it moved, long and dark, on their track. St. John uses an expression which shows us, in the pale light, those in the boat intently, fixedly, fearfully, gazing at the apparition as it moved still closer and closer."—Edersheim.

Why did Christ (Mark) make as if going straight by the disciples? "He would wish his disciples to recognize him. He would wish them to understand distinctly what he was doing, and what he had done, and what it was in his power to do. He would wish to pass onward by their side, and in their view, till it should be the very best moment to turn and give them relief."—Morison.

How did Christ reassure them when they cried out in fear? It must have been with a radiant smile that he said, "Be of good cheers; it is I; be not afraid."

The Half-Hearted Disciple and Christ's Rebuke.—Vs. 28-33. What disciple was first to answer Christ? Characteristically, Peter. And "the combination of doubt (if it be thou') with presumption ('bid me come on the water') is peculiarly characteristic of Peter."—Edersheim.

What should this experience have done for Peter? "It should have made him more cautious afterward in his avowals, his too self-confident boastings, of what he would do and dare for his master."—John Foster.

How did Christ rebuke Peter as he saved him? It was a gentle rebuke, "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?"

What was the effect of this miracle upon the disciples? They were amazed beyond measure, not only at the walking on the water, but at the immediate cessation of the storm as soon as they had taken Jesus on board.

Human Misery and Christ's Healing.—Vs. 34-36. Where did the boat land? With what seemed miraculous suddenness (John) the disciples made the rest of their journey across to the northwestern side of the lake, and came into the land of Gennesaret.

What happened immediately on Christ's arrival? "See how Jesus Christ goes to work again."—Joseph Parker. He was at once recognized as the marvelous healer, and the whole region was aroused to bring their sick within reach of his wonderful powers.

How did they expect the cures to be wrought? They were satisfied if they could get close enough in the crowd merely to touch his garment.

Illustration. Prayer is something for every day, and not merely for emergencies. "I knew a man, a good man, who passed through a threatening experience in his business for two or three weeks; and he prayed more in that time than he had prayed for fifteen or twenty years. He confessed as much to me, and he regarded it as an honorable confession. That is not Christian prayer."—John Rhey Thompson, D. D. Christian prayer meets emergencies with the quiet confidence born of a long series of answered prayers and blessed communings all through the years.

PRES. LOUDERMILK ON UNION

From Now on Will Stand for Definite Propositions and Accomplishments—Wants Members.

President W. T. Loudermilk of the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union of Texas, in a recent interview with Frank P. Holland of Farm and Ranch, said:

"I have the hearty co-operation of each and every state official now in office and from now on the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union of Texas will stand for definite propositions and accomplishments."

He desires every person eligible to become a member, and states that he proposes to get rid of a number who are already members and under proper construction of the union law, were never eligible, and edged their way in under false pretenses and for selfish purposes only. He insists that the union shall not be a harboring place for secret workers, for trusts, corporations and other designing combinations seeking to influence members, or using the union as a whole for purposes that would be detrimental to the interests of honest people, and in violation of its code.

President Loudermilk says that he desires and hopes to have the good will and support of every good citizen, no matter what his occupation, for the organization in its efforts to assist the producer in securing fair prices for products, and a square deal from public service and other corporations.

He believes that the producer is not receiving such prices for his products as conditions justify, yet says that the consumer is paying, considering the amount received by the producer, entirely too much for what he consumes.

He does not believe in arraying class against class. He claims that members of the union recognize the fact that those engaged in other legitimate occupations are entitled to reasonable compensation for services performed in manufacturing and distributing natural products, but says that, as a rule, there is too much "rake-off" between the producer and consumer and demands that the gamblers be suppressed, the railroads regulated, trusts curbed, and grafters of every sort and condition be made to earn an honest living out or inside the penitentiary.

He claims that the worst enemies of the union hold membership cards, and if they ever were, are not now "hewers of wood nor drawers of water," but are trying to sell "'fluence" or plying some other method of graft.

He told the writer that he was planning specific, concrete work for the organization that would show good results because the "bone and sinew" of the Farmers' union are in line with him and other officers, and those who think they have the union where they can use it for ulterior purposes or break it, will find themselves planning without the backing of the union or the ability to hold membership, after being located.

President Loudermilk used some strong language and even called names and, if the writer is not very much mistaken, in conclusions shaped up after listening to him, there is going to be something strenuous happen. Should he and his co-workers succeed, and there is no reason, if backed by the membership, why they should not in accomplishing the results planned for, every good citizen will be benefited, and the membership of the union will rapidly increase.

If he and others working with him secure the support of the locals, they are certainly going to do much good, even though they accomplish only a part of the good things they have in mind.

If they do not secure the backing of the members, the Farmers' union will dwindle in membership and finally travel the road that has led to the disintegration of many other organizations that have started out with good intentions, and after doing more or less good, became wreckage on the hard rocks of selfishness.

American Cotton in India.

According to Consul Stuart K. Lupton of Karachi, India, the deputy director of agriculture in Sind, states that American cotton seed was tried in several places in that district of India last season with good results. The average yield is 575 to 660 pounds per acre, rather more than the indigenous cotton, while the staple is at least half an inch longer. It is supposed that cultivation will be extended next year, as it can be sown in June, the best time of the year from the standpoint of irrigation, and ripens much quicker than native cotton.

One Brood of Plum Curculio.

The plum curculio has only one brood a year, and in this respect differs from a great many, but makes up for this deficiency in another way. Each female beetle lays eight to ten eggs a day and continues laying eggs for from three to four weeks. Thus it is not uncommon for the plum curculio to lay 200 eggs in a season. For this reason, and because the egg laying is spread over so long a period it is more difficult to keep the curculio in check than it is the codling moth.

Feeding Young Pigs.

Successful pig-raisers have learned to feed the young pigs on separator milk as early as possible, adding meal and other foods as age increases, so by the time they are one year old at most they are ready for market.

CRAZE FOR WOODEN BEADS

Recent Fancy of Fashion That Really Seems to Have Little to Recommend It.

A curious departure from the scintillating glass forms are the wooden beads that are in either natural color or any shade that is delightfully barbaric in its intensity. The texture of the wood insures a lack of luster that hurts one's esthetic feelings.

These wooden beads are strung on coarse thread or string and are used for forming a cabochon for a hat or for draping the eastern turbans of coarse net.

Tunics are edged with wooden beads dyed to match the color of the gown, and on net, voile or chiffon the colored forms are decidedly effective.

Belts of raffia are studded with colored wooden beads, while handbags, linen buckles and fancy clasps are but a few of the possibilities sugegsted to the clever ones.

A New Notion in Neckwear.

A smart neckwear shop displayed in its window the other day a very attractive set of white batiste stock and wrist cuffs, with two-inch turnovers of dark linen, on which were worked white dots.

The linen turnovers were also scalloped in white and the batiste foundation was exquisitely fine and sheer and was embroidered in a dainty flower design.

Over the sheer white stock and cuffs the dark linen turnovers were most effective. The set shown had turnovers of navy blue linen, but the idea might be carried out in wistaria, leaf green, plum or other shade matching the silk blouse.

Do not complain of suffering; it teaches you to succor others.—Queen Dido.

This is an exact representation of the carton containing a bottle of St. Joseph's Liquid Liver Regulator, but it is much larger than this illustration, and printed in black ink on a yellow carton. Druggists and general merchants sell it at 50 cents a bottle, or you can get it direct from us at the same price. This is a delightful liver medicine—prompt, effective, and exceedingly pleasant to the taste. Try just one bottle to satisfy yourself—and you'll buy more.

THE BANNER GREAT PRIZE CONTEST.

I nominate.....

as a candidate in The Banner contest.

This Nomination Counts 1,000 Votes.

VOL. XVIII

THE BANNER'S GREAT CONTEST.

In the belief that the people of Chilton county would thoroughly appreciate an honestly conducted contest in which all might participate without fear or favor THE BANNER has inaugurated the most original contest ever known in this or any other county, which has already taken hold of our good people like wildfire.

In co-operation with the Alred Drug Co., the popular druggists, J. C. Jones & Co., the well known dealers in general merchandise; W. J. Ruffin & Sons, the leading grocery firm of Clanton, and the Clanton Millinery Company, the delight of the ladies, The Banner, known as the peoples paper, and the only newspaper printed in Chilton county, made arrangements for the free gift of a series of five valuable prizes which will be given away to the fortunate winners in this great contest on Christmas Eve next, December 24, 1910.

There are no strings tied to this offer—it is free for any one whose name is placed in nomination, and nominations can be made at any time during the contest, although of course the earlier the nomination the greater the chance of getting votes.

The first prize is the substantial sum of One Hundred dollars in cash—made up by the firms above mentioned, which amount will be handed over to the trustees of the Church receiving the greatest number of votes, and which may be used in any manner the trustees may see proper. The church may need repairs, or new seats or a new roof and One Hundred Dollars will be a great help in that direction, or if it is not needed for any of those purposes it would make a handsome Christmas present for the faithful Pastor, who would probably find good use for the money.

The second prize is the substantial sum of Fifty Dollars, made up by the same firms, and will be given to the Church receiving the second highest number of votes, the money to be used as the trustees may direct.

The third prize is a magnificent Diamond Ring, of the value of $75.00, which may be seen at any time at the store of the Alred Drug Company, and will make the eyes of any young lady sparkle who will walk into that favorite drug store and take a look at it, and make up her mind to become its owner on December 24, 1910.

Having provided for the elder peoples pleasure in two handsome gifts to the churches, and to the gratification of the ladies with a splendid Diamond Ring, the fourth prize goes to the ambitious young man who longs for a business education, and is a Scholarship in that old established and popular institution, the Bryant & Stratton Business College of Louisville, Ky. valued at Fifty Dollars, ann will be given to the young man who receives the highest number of votes by December 24, 1910.

Last, but by no means least, the Young Folks must be looked after, and a Handsome Bicycle, valued at Thirty-five Dollars is the fifth prize to be awarded to the Boy or Youth receiving the highest number of votes by Christmas Eve, 1910.

All that you have to do is to fill out the nomination blank with the name of the church or individual you desire to vote for and send it to The Banner. The nomination is entirely free and counts 1000 votes for the name placed thereon. One nomination only will be allowed to count for each church or person.

For every yearly subscription to The Banner, or for every dollar paid to The Banner for Job Printing, (and The Banner has been the only Job Printing establishment in Chilton county for nearly nineteen years) we allow you 1000 votes, and for every purchase you make at the before mentioned stores, one vote for each cent expended with them—that is for every cent you pay them you get a coupon—5 votes for 5 cents, 100 votes for $1.00, or in paying your bills 500 votes for $5.00.

Once again we repeat this is the most unique contest ever originated; we invite you to take part in it and the prizes will most assuredly be delivered to the fortunate winners on Christmas Eve, 1910.

This contest originated with The Banner with the assistance of the firms mentioned; the votes will be counted each week and the result published in The Banner, which guarantees the safe delivery of the prizes on December 24, 1910.

All coupons issued during the month must be placed in the ballot boxes not later than the fifth day of the month following.

Editor Banner:—Will you allow us a small space in your valuable to say a few words to the good people of the county in regard to the Children's day services to be held at this place the second Sunday in June, the program has been published.

Now, we want to say that this a rally of the sect of people known as the Tongues Movement, who are recognized church fighters and who don't believe in any kind of organization and especially not the church. Now, we want to say further that the doors of this church have been closed by the Pastor and the trustees against this movement and notices posted not to trespass on the same. But the notices have been torn down and the doors broken in the still hours of night by some of the main leaders of the movement.

The officers and members of this church who have not rebelled, but have stood firm to the principles of the church, are not going to have anything to do with the exercises at all, but expect to look after the interest of the church. Therefore, we ask the good people of the country to stay away from there on that date, as it has reached the stage when we can't hold a service without a fuss or a fight, as these people propose to run over and rule or ruin.

We notice the name of our pastor, W. A. Crim on their program for the welcome address. Now, we want to say they had no authority to put his name on it for I don't suppose he will be there. Also Hon. L. H. Reynolds will not be there and we, the trustees of this place, respectfully request Hon. J. O. Middleton not to be there. However, we are always glad to have these gentlemen with us, but in this case we don't want to aid a set of people in any way who have destroyed a church, wrecked a community and brought reproach on Christianity, and as for Rev. Mr. Mims we would be glad he would be governed accordingly. Thanking you, Mr. Editor for this space and wishing you much success we are Yours truly,

W. V. NORTHCUTT, }
E. L. GLASSCOCK, } Trustees.

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space in this dear old paper to say a few words. The health in this place is very good at present.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely. The singing at the church Sunday last was enjoyed by many.

Mr. and Mrs. Curtain are away this week.

We are sorry to say that Mr. H. W. Cooper has gone to Birmingham to make his future home.

Mr. E. W. Blalock and little son visited Montgomery Sunday last.

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space in your paper to say a few lines. Health of this community is very good at present.

Well, the farmers are having a good time to chop their cotton.

There was a large crowd went to Maplesville Sunday and got disappointed.

Mr Seab Carter and his wife visited his father's home last Saturday and Sunday and report a good time.

Mr. Stirling Sexton's baby is very sick at present time, we hope it will soon recover.

Mr. Bob Carter took a flying trip to Maplesville Sunday.

Misses Rosie and Ada Miner visited at Maplesville Sunday. Well, I guess I had better ring off for this time.

A RAMBLING BOY.

I am in the Banner contest, and anyone who makes a purchase at the Alred Drug Co., the Clanton Millinery Co., J. C. Jones & Co., W. J. Ruffin & Sons, or subscribes for the Banner, if they will call for their tickets and hand them to me, the same will be appreciated.

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space in your valuable paper to say a few words as I haven't heard anything from this place in some time. Health of this community is very good at present. The farmers are all getting along fine with their work. I will say something about the good singing at Pleasant Grove church last Sunday, we had a mighty good singing and a good Sunday school; had plenty of dinner. Some of our leaders were out but that didn't matter, we had a good time without them, as we would have had with them, I don't think there is much religion about those kind of folks. What do you readers of the Banner think about folks that will stay away from Sunday school and all day singings?

Mrs. Litha Garner visited her parents near Shoults.

Govenor Sewell has been visting his mother this week from Montgomery.

Miss Fannie Moore visited Misses Bearden Sunday.

I Guess I had better bring this to a close. If this misses the waste basket I will come again.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL GIRL.

Pleasant Grove

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space in your valuable paper I just want to praise Pleasant Grove for having such a fine singing, and also dinner on the 4th Sunday in May. It sure was nice and conducted so nicely, everything went off well. The organist was Dr. Parnell's wife, she played charming, it was the best music I have ever heard in that church. The doctor had to leave us early in the evening and the singing master took his seat at the organ and he sang and played so sweetly it seems the people enjoyed themselves the best I have ever seen.

I said something about the people looking so happy at Pleasant Grove that day and some small child said it was because our false leaders were absent, and a smaller little fellow paying I hope they will stay absent all the time so we'll always have a good time.

OLD FRIEND MAJOR.

Fairview

Editor Banner:—Please give me in your paper to say a few words from Fairview. Everything seems to be bright and lovely.

FOLK OUTLINES HIS PLATFORM FOR 1912

Principles on Which He Will Seek Nomination.

Missouri Democrats of all factions at a dinner here heard former Gov. Joseph W. Folk announce the principles on which, it is said, he will seek the presidential nomination in 1912. The dinner was in charge of men who have been promoting the boom of the former governor.

"The doctrine of equal rights should be made a living, vital and controlling force in the government," said Mr. Folk after he had listened to Democrats from all parts of the state tell the guests about the former governor they should endorse for the presidency.

JOSEPH W. FOLK.

"The Democratic party," continued Mr. Folk, "should insist upon the stamping out of graft and corruption from every department of the government; the eradication of all special favors, including bounties, subsidies and a tariff for any purpose other than revenue.

"We need the honest, sincere enforcement of the laws we already have and the regulation of the rates of public utility corporations upon a reasonable basis that justice may be done the people and a fair return for the amount actually invested be afforded."

Other principles named by the speaker were the preservation of the rights to the states of self-government, the restriction of American territory to the western hemisphere as a necessary corollary of the Monroe doctrine, the extension of American trade by revising the restriction upon commerce, a just income tax, the election of United States senators by direct vote and unrelenting opposition to the domination in public affairs of special interests and the elimination of such influences from politics.

CORRUPTION SCANDAL.

Governor Deneen, of Illinois, Orders Probe to Bottom.

Intense interest has been added to the legislative corruption scandal in Illinois, which involves the right of William Lorimer to his seat in the United States senate, by a statement signed by Governor Deneen, wherein he declares for a thorough investigation.

Governor Deneen held a lengtay conference with State's Attorney Burke, and a statement is published over the signature of the governor wherein it is stated that Mr. Burke is assured of all possible aid by the state officials.

"The whole nefarious plot should be exposed," said the governor. "The crime of bribery is one of the most insidious and dangerous. It makes a farce of parties and of elections."

One glint of humor is seen in the proceedings. It has been learned definitely that the "treasurer of the corporation jackpot" did not divide the spoils evenly and that he kept for himself more than the lion's share. The participants having no recourse, feared to complain.

PEDDLER LEFT HIM $10,000.

The Good Fortune That Befell a Kind-Hearted Farmer.

George White, a farmer and rural mail carrier at Rea, Pa., has delivered to himself a letter from a lawyer in a western state informing him that one Patrick Sullivan has left to him in his will $10,000.

White, who first took it as a joke, has remembered that 15 years ago he befriended a peddler whose name was Patrick Sullivan. He had often treated him to meals or lodging.

White is now negotiating for the $10,000 which is said to have been left him by the old peddler.

WHERE HOMLINESS COUNTS.

Ugliest Woman in World Paid $5,000 Per Week.

Mlle. Polaire, said by her press agent to be the ugliest woman in the world, has arrived in New York from France on the liner Savoie for a long theatrical engagement at Hammerstein's.

ALMA KELNER TRAGEDY.

Police Believe They Are On Track of the Child's Slayer.

The most persistent questioning of Mrs. Joseph Wendling, who is held at the police station here charged with having been an accessory to the murder of little Alma Kelner, the child whose mutilated body was found in a sub-cellar in St. John's parochial school, after an untiring search for months, has failed to shake the woman in her first declaration that she knew nothing about the crime. She adheres to her statement that a ring and pin found in a trunk at her home, both of which have positively been identified as the property of the murdered girl, were given her by a boy, and further than her admission that she has seen nothing of her husband, who was janitor at the school, since his disappearance January 14, when he drew $50 from the bank, she will say nothing about him.

Diligent investigation by the police and detectives is weaving a strong chain of circumstantial evidence about the missing janitor, for the apprehension of whom the police department set out a dragnet which will sweep every part of the country. Clothing which he is known to have worn bears numerous stains which the detectives confidently pronounce traces of blood.

The Kelner family has offered a reward of $1,000 for the arrest and conviction of the murder of Alma.

Mrs. Lena Wendling was presented in police court and her case continued until June 8. Mrs. Wendling denied all knowledge of the murder of the little girl.

GOVERNOR BROWN IS AGAIN IN RACE

Announces Candidacy For a Second Term.

Following the action of the state democratic executive committee in naming primary and convention dates, Governor Joseph M. Brown, in a brief statement, has announced that he will be a candidate for re-election in the primary of August 23.

Governor Brown's announcement does not come as any surprise; his friends and the public generally have long expected it shortly following the executive committee meeting.

Governor Brown delayed his announcement until this time, because he did not desire to put a political campaign upon the people of the state until the executive committee's action made time and occasion for it.

GEORGIA STATE PRIMARY.

Democratic Executive Committee Names Date and Prescribes Rules.

The Georgia state primary will be held on Tuesday, August 23.

In accordance with a report submitted by the committee on resolutions, of which F. J. Paxon was chairman, the state democratic executive committee fixed that date for the primary, and adopted the rules to govern the same, as recommended by the committee, with practically no discussion.

It is to be a "white primary," in which all qualified white voters, irrespective of past political affiliations, who intend in good faith to abide the result of the primary and support its nominations, are invited to participate.

The democratic state convention, at which formal nomination of the party candidates will be made, will be held on Thursday, September 1, in the Auditorium-Armory in Atlanta.

In the convention each county is to have the full representation to which it is entitled and in accord with its majority vote.

GUARDS ARE BLAMED.

Coroner's Jury Returns Verdict on Lucile Mine Disaster.

Charging that reckless shooting and inhumane treatment on the part of some of the prison guards did much to enhance the terror of the Lucile, Alabama, mine disaster, May 16, whereby twenty-seven negro convicts met their death, the coroner's jury which has been investigating the disaster, returned its verdict.

The jury has found that an insufficient number of guards was maintained at the stockade; that criminal negligence was displayed on the part of a guard, that the fire was started by three convicts, two of whom, Ed. Porter and Joseph McCoy are dead, and George Porter, living.

A tunnel had been driven into the hill above the cement plant and 400 kegs of powder had been placed therein. The workmen were preparing to seal the chamber, preliminary to firing the blast, when the powder exploded prematurely.

FOREIGNERS FEAR CHINESE UPRISING

Warships Make Ready to Protect Americans.

The feeling in several of the provinces of China is still giving the authorities much concern at Washington, D. C. United States Minister Calhoun, at Peking, in a cablegram to the state department, transmits a message from the United States consul at Nanking in which he says that the city has been posted with placards inciting the people to the destruction of foreign life and property.

The minister says that the United States steamship New Orleans is there, and is prepared, with the German, British and Japanese warships, to land a considerable force, if necessary.

Placards have been posted in the streets calling upon people to rise and slaughter the foreigners and destroy their property.

Threats that a revolution will be launched are causing Chinese to flee with their treasures to the country districts where they are burying their wealth. The authorities at Nanking have removed the bolts from the rifles of the soldiers. The situation is considered to depend entirely on the attitude of the military, which up to the present had not manifested symptoms of disloyalty.

It is believed that the cruiser New Orleans and the German and Japanese men of war lying off the town will be adequate to protect all foreigners in the event of an outbreak.

CHANNEL DISASTER.

French Boat, Struck By Steamer, is Sent to Bottom.

Twenty-three men were drowned in the English channel when the French submarine boat Pluviose was struck by the packet steamer Pas DeCalais. The passengers on the latter were thrown into panic, and the ship itself was so badly damaged that she had to put back to Calais.

The fighting ship was scudding along partly submerged when the steamer crashed into her. According to the reports, the submarine spun around for a moment and then the water began to pour through a big rent in her plates. Before a man could escape she had foundered in one of the deepest parts of the channel.

This is the sixth serious accident in the French submarine flotilla in five years.

DEATH TRAIL OF STREET CARS.

One Hundred and Ten Persons Killed in Chicago in Past Eleven Months.

Brundage, by City Attorney John R. Caverly. Fourteen of these fatalities occurred during May, in which month there were also 322 persons injured, many of them seriously.

Twenty of the injured were children under the age of 10 years, who were playing in the street when struck. Thirty-nine were hurt because of getting on or off of moving cars, and 84 others were hurt in crossing from one side of the street to the other after alighting from cars. Some of the most serious accidents happened to intoxicated persons.

TONGS ARE WARNED.

Imperial Yellow Posters Appear on Streets of New York's Chinatown.

Two posters of the imperial yellow with the dragon stamped at the head of each declaring that the tongs must make peace and war no more, have appeared on the streets of New York's Chinatown. The message which they bore was from the voice of authority in Peking, spoken through the lips of Consul General Yang Yuo Ying.

To guarantee that there shall be no more fighting between the On Leong Tong and the Four Brothers, each of the warring societies is commanded to select representatives of peace. This committee will meet in conjunction with the consul general and some rational peace agreement must be formulated. The representatives of the On Leongs and the Four Brothers must come empowered to sign it.

RAIL BILL PASSED.

Democrats Favored Large Portion of Measure.—Vote 50 to 12.

The senate passed the administration railroad bill. It had been under consideration for more than 21 weeks, and practically no other business except appropriation bills were considered in that long period.

Only 12 votes, all of these by Democrats, were recorded against the bill. The practical unanimity with which the measure was passed was due to the radical changes made in the measure from the form in which it was drafted by Attorney General Wickersham, following numerous conferences at the White House on the subject of amending interstate commerce laws. All of the "insurgents" who opposed many features of the original bill, voted for it.

CUTTING THE WEDDING CAKE

Prescribed Form for Operation That Seems Almost a Part of the Ceremony.

There is a distinction in these days between the bride's cake and wedding cake. The former has come to mean that one used at the rehearsal, while the latter is served in boxes marked with the initials of bride and groom.

These boxes are usually filled with fruit cake and served from a side table in the hall as each guest leaves after the reception. If you do not wish half your guests to go cakeless it is well to have the boxes passed out by a waiter. The most liberal providing will not cover greedy persons who take home four or five boxes apiece.

The bride's cake proper is generally served the night of the rehearsal, sometimes at the wedding breakfast. It is usually a white cake or pound cake iced with elaborate bridal designs with white icing and contains trinkets that are supposed to tell fortunes.

These trinkets can be bought in fancy satin boxes, which contain a ring for the next to wed, a penny for wealth, a thimble for the old maid, a button for the old bachelor. Some of the more elaborate sets have tiny gold charms, slippers, wedding bells and hearts in addition.

Value of Loves and Lives.

Most things in this world are comparative. The fact that a jury in Brooklyn estimates the loss of a husband's affections at $75,000 within a few days after a jury in Bridgeport estimated the loss of a 14-year-old boy's life at $300, shows how differently juries look at things. The absence of any Wall street arrangement by which the cash market value of loves and lives is quoted creates hard nuts for courts and juries to crack, and as a result the verdicts are a study in variety, a problem in diversity.

SUPERSTITIONS THAT ARE OLD

Have Been Inseparably Connected With Bridals Since the Advent of That Important Ceremony.

The bride who believes in omens has her hands full. She might as well turn over her trousseau and wedding breakfast arrangements to others. She will have all she can manage in doing and leaving undone the things that will bring her good or ill-luck in her wedded life.

If she has a hankering for luck, of course she will wear on her bridal day "something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue." Every bride does, whether hers is or is not a superstitious soul.

Then she will be married on Wednesday, "the best day of all." Nor must this Wednesday be in May or the bride will not remain long with her husband. It should also be in the full of the moon or when it is growing. Nor must she alter the day set for her wedding.

The day having been chosen, she must be sure not to find a minister who has never married anyone before, for that is the worst of luck.

She must also make a deal with the weather man so that the sun will shine; and forego her hankering for an evening ceremony, as marriage after sunset is unlucky.

On her left leg, nearest the heart, she should wear as many yellow garters as she has bridesmaids. If those maidens wear those lucky garters for a year, they will not be unwed at the end of that time.

Of course there must be rice and old shoes in the house, for what bride would risk her luck by not being a target for her friends when starting on her honeymoon? The timid maiden may substitute confetti, but let her beware, she is tampering with her future luck, not to mention leaving days of misery for those who must sweep carpets and pavement.

Then must our bride be sure to take plenty of strong coffee at the wedding breakfast, for should fatigue get her and she be the first to fall asleep on the wedding night, she will likewise be the first to die.

ONE LETTER COSTS FORTUNE

Visions of Vast Riches Disappear When New Jersey "Heir" Learns of Mistake.

Burlington, N. J.—William P. Stockley learned the other day that he missed by a mere letter becoming a millionaire. An industrious policeman with a description of a William Stockley, missing for several years from Wilmington, Del., found the local Stockley the other night and told him of his great luck.

Stockley once lived in Delaware and was having visions of a palace and automobiles while the authorities were endeavoring to connect with the executor of the estate from which the missing man will inherit more than $1,000,000 if found.

The answer from Delaware gave the full name of the missing man as William Brown Stockley. The middle initial of the local William is "P.," which does not stand for Brown, and he is now back on his job convinced that the fates had tricked him.

First English Words.

"It is a libel on foreigners to say that the first English word they learn is 'damn,'" said the trained nurse. "It isn't 'damn' at all, it is 'upsey daisy.' There is something about that classic nursery phrase that tickles their ears. They seem to pick it up the day they leave Ellis Island. I know hundreds of foreigners—the poor, hard-working kind, with big families—and am familiar with their linguistic attainments. They are fond fathers and mothers, most of them, and they jabber baby talk as volubly as American parents. Most of it is their native jargon, but 'upsey daisy' is the gem of their vocabulary. Go into any foreign quarter you please, and watch the grown-ups toss the babies to the ceiling. Nine times out of ten they will preface that stunt with 'upsey daisy.'"

The Secret of Youth

Do you ever wonder how you can remain young, or why other women older than you, look younger than you do?

The secret can be put in a few words: "Preserve your health, and you will preserve your youth."

By "health" we mean not alone physical health, but nerve health, as, sometimes, magnificently strong-looking women are nervous wrecks.

But whether you are weak physically or nervously, you need a tonic, and the best tonic for you is Cardui.

It builds strength for the physical and nervous systems. It helps put flesh on your bones and vitality into your nerves.

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

"My mother," writes Mrs. Z. L. Adcock, of Smithville, Tenn., "is 44 years old and is passing through the change of life.

"She was irregular and bloated and suffered terribly. My father stepped over to the store and got her a bottle of Cardui, which she took according to directions and now she is up, able to do her housework and says she feels like a new woman." Try Cardui in your own case.

GASOLINE ENGINE FOR DAIRY

Its Use Is Recommended Because of Its Convenience and Economy—Put to Other Uses.

(By WILLIAM H. UNDERWOOD.)

A person operating a dairy of 15 cows or more should have two gasoline engines. I have two engines in use in my dairy, one seven horsepower and one two horsepower.

The seven horsepower is used for grinding feed and the two horsepower for separating, washing, churning and pumping water.

I once used a sweep mill for grinding, but it was unsatisfactory, because just at the time work was slack so we might grind 75 or a 100 bushels of feed ahead it would be sure to rain or snow so we could not work out of doors.

But with the engine under cover we can grind at times when we can't do anything else. With the old horsepower machines, the track was usually worn in deep ditches which made it difficult to carry grain in and out.

The horses would not make the circuit many times before they would get to shirking and the longer we ground the slower it went.

A seven horsepower engine is plenty large enough to run a two hole sheller and feed mill at the same time, but it is a little light to crush cobs unless set pretty coarse.

My engine will crush from 18 to 20 bushels an hour, and consume about one-half gallon gasoline per hour under full load.

I have never tested it to see how many bushels shelled corn it would grind, but from the way it crowds through I would think 40 bushels would not be an extravagant estimate.

This engine could be put to other uses as well as grinding, but I have never used it for anything else. The small engine is used daily at present.

The dairy is producing 50 gallons of milk daily and this is separated with this little engine. It is set at 300 revolutions, is fitted with a six inch pulley, drives a large pulley on the line shaft 15 inches in diameter.

The separator pulley on the line shaft is six inches and a large wooden pulley on the separator 14 inches in diameter.

This set of pulleys runs the separator at 55 revolutions. In order to figure out the velocity you desire a machine to run it is necessary to have a speed indicator.

First, ascertain the speed of the engine. Then, if you do not wish to change its speed you will have to use pulleys which will increase or diminish the speed of your machine as you wish.

This can be figured out by finding how far a given point on the circumference of the engine pulley will travel in a minute and from this basis ascertain the sizes of the wheels needed along the line by dividing the length of their circumferences into the distance traveled by a given point on the preceding wheel.

This division is necessary except the pulleys on the shaft where they all make an equal number of revolutions, whether large or small.

Woman's Greatest Charm

is how to make herself attractive. But without health it is hard for her to be lovely in face, form or temper. A weak, sickly woman will be nervous and irritable. Constipation and Kidney poisons show in pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. But Electric Bitters always prove a godsend to women who want health, beauty and friends. They regulate Stomach, Liver and Kidneys, purify the blood; give strong nerves, bright eyes, pure breath, smooth, velvety skin, lovely complexion, good health. Try them. 50c at Upchurch Drug Co.

OLD ENGLISH CANOPIED SEAT

Few Greater Joys in Life Than to Sit in Garden and Inhale Fragrance and Listen to Birds.

Those who possess gardens and enjoy outdoor life will be eagerly looking forward to the warm and sunny days when so many happy hours may be spent among the flowers. There are few, if any, greater joys in life than to sit among the roses and other sweet-smelling flowers on a quiet summer's evening and inhale their fragrance, and to listen to the warbling of birds. But to enjoy these pleasures to the full the seat must be a comfortable one, and yet it must be of such design that it will harmonize with the quietest features of the garden and be strong and of lasting qualities. The old English canopied seat illustrated is one of the plainest, and will, on this account, appeal to many.

"It gives me great pleasure to be able to refer to Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills as the best remedy we have yet had in our house for the prevention and cure of headache. JOSEPH FRANKOWICK, Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills.

The best feature of this remarkable remedy is the fact that it does not derange the stomach or leave any disagreeable after-effects.

The Democratic executive committee held an enthusiastic meeting last Saturday—twenty-seven members out of a total of thirty-two being present, the greatest number that has attended any committee meeting.

The resignation of H. M. Simpson as chairman and Parrish Jr. as secretary were both accepted and W. M. Adams was unanimouly elected chairman and F. M. Wood secretary.

Plans were discussed for conducting the coming campaign.

The Hon. F. L. Blackmon, next congressman from this district, who will succeed the popular W. B. Craig, made a spirited address to the committee which was highly enjoyed and appreciated. Mr. Blackmon has a pleasant manner of speaking and told some telling facts.

All the county nominees also made short talks to the committee—E. B. Deason, H. M. Simpson, B. E. Jones, J. D. Retherford and E. L. Hayes. T. A. Curry also spoke.

After the committee adjourned they were entertained at an elegant dinner at the Palmer House by Hon. F. L. Blackmon, over thirty being present at table.

It was generally agreed among the committeemen that the prospects for Democratic success in the November election were never brighter.

The Board of Registrars will meet at Clanton on Friday and Saturday, July 22 and 23, 1910, for the purpose of registering voters from all parts of Chilton county, who may wish to vote in the Republican primary.

Very few public men would be willing to be taken at their publicly expressed estimation of themselves.

All Day Singing at Court Hous.

The all day singing at the Court House last Sunday was heartily enjoyed by the large congregation. While it was rainy and the day had the appearance of being a bad one, the people poured in from the country until the house was well filled. The singing was excellent and much praise is due to Mr. R. J. Langston for the success of the meeting.

HAPPILY MARRIED.

The marriage of Mr. J. Osmond Middleton, representative of Chilton county in the last legislature, to Miss Carale L. Littlejohn, the graceful and charming daughter of County Treasurer J. W. Littlejohn, was solemnized Wednesday night at the home of the bride's parents at Clanton.

New Neck Ornament.

With the long, dangling ear rings of seed pearls or French diamonds are similar double dangles worn on a thin chain around the neck.

These are newer than heart-shaped, round or octagonal pendants, and much smarter than the colored antique ornaments which have been overdone in the past few seasons.

Instead of chains a fine necklace of seed pearls or diamond chips is sometimes used.

German Agriculture.

The supply of foodstuffs in Germany has only been kept up to the maximum figures by intensive agriculture, the employment of modern machinery, scientific fertilization and the employment of millions of female farm hands. The German workman pays as much as the American for his food, except potatoes, milk and vegetables.

Ordinary Buttons.

Ordinary buttons without shanks should be sewed on loosely. A good way is to put a pin under the button before sewing, then when it is removed the threads will be loose. Wind threads around these loose threads a number of times to form a thread shank. Where buttons are used as trimmings they should be sewed close to the garment and not wound. In sewing on buttons be careful not to let the knot show; place it between the stay and the outside fabric. If a cord is used to fasten several buttons, leave this a trifle loose between the buttons, as if it draws it will cause wrinkles in the outside. Use double thread to sew on buttons.

Spray Helmet for Firemen.

Firemen frequently find it necessary to play the hose on their fellow-firemen to protect them from the intense heat of the conflagration which they are fighting. Borrowing from this idea, an inventor has devised a helmet formed with a spray nozzle which is connected to a small hose line. The water spouts out from the nozzle in all directions, causing a miniature cascade around the body of the fireman, enabling him to attack at close quarters fires that would be unendurable under ordinary conditions.

Monarch Changing Wives.

Despite his trials and responsibilities, Mulai Hafid, sultan of Morocco, finds opportunity for distractions. His majesty has divorced one of the four legitimate wives allowed by koranic law, and is about to espouse the daughter of a late vizier. It is rumored that two other royal divorces are pending, and that the places of these discarded wives will be taken by the daughters of loyal subjects.

Longevity of Birds.

The duchess of Bedford is an enthusiastic ornithologist. In an article in British Birds she gives some remarkable instances of longevity among birds in her own collection. A Barbary dove which has been in the duchess' possession for fifteen years was left her by an old woman who also owned it for fifteen years and who always said it was an old bird when it was given to her.

Fat Test of Cream.

A creamery patron writes the University of Wisconsin:

"We are selling our cream and are not satisfied with the test. We can make ten pounds of butter out of 37 pounds of cream. What should the test of our cream be?

If the butter contains 82 per cent. fat, which is the usual amount in normal butter, then ten pounds of butter would contain 8.2 pounds of butterfat, and since this amount of butterfat was contained in 37 pounds of cream, the cream would test 22.2 per cent. of fat.—Prof. E. H. Farrington, University of Wisconsin.

Hint for Book Lovers.

To open a book without breaking the back or binding, lay it, back downward, on a table or smooth surface. Press the front cover down until it touches the table, then the back cover, holding the leaves in one hand while you open a few of the leaves at the back, then a few at the front, alternately pressing them down gently until you reach the center of the volume. This should be done two or three times. Never open a book violently, nor bend back the covers. Such treatment is liable not only to break the back, but to loosen the leaves.

Masses Must Be Fed.

From the days of Joseph down the only well populated country which had enough grain to satisfy its own consumers was Egypt, rich beyond the record of any other soil this side of Paradise. Ferrero, in his history of Rome, shows the transcendant political importance of corn in all times. Feed your people, king or demagogue, else they will overthrow you. For the masses from furthest antiquity to most recent days, there has never been any torch of dissatisfaction, rebellion and anarchy like a shortage of bread.

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space in the dear old Banner to say a few words. The health of this little village is very good at present.

We are very sorry to say Mr. Tom Anderson fell out at the door Saturday night, June 4, and broke three of his ribs; he is suffering very much, hope he will soon recover.

Mrs. Jessie Hinton is visiting Mrs. E. G. Caldwell this week.

Miss Myrtle Cooper of Vida gave us a pleasant call Sunday.

Mr. Tyler Harrison was a pleasant visitor here Saturday night.

We are having a hard battle to fight over the governor's election. All of the boose fighters want Mr. O'Neal for governor. I think he will be the proper man for the office if Walter D. Seed gets beat. If he don't Mr. O'Neal can't help to get the whiskey back in Alabama like it was when B. B. Comer got to be governor.

Well, I'm very to say I lost my yard dog. He barked himself to death at candidates. He was a good dog, I sure did hate to lose him.. So, I will ring off. Will come again if this misses the waste basket. So much here to the dear old Banner and its many readers.

Earth's Age.

A new estimate of the earth's age has recently been given by William Morris Davis, of Harvard. For the usually accepted 100,000,000 years he estimates 60,000,000, based on an examination of the cliffs of Arizona and Utah, where the time taken to deposit the strata can be easily computed.

USE GRIMSBY'S PIPE

ENTIRE OFFICE FORCE SMOKES WITH THAT GENTLEMAN.

Mr. Philmstack Explains Method by Which Living Expenses Have Been Materially Reduced Without Losing Enjoyment of Tobacco.

"Stated as a general proposition," said Mr. Philmstack, "I don't like a strong pipe. I have always regarded a man who smoked a rank, evil-smelling pipe as an enemy of society. But the wind that blows roofs ashore speeds the sailor, and often if we will but wait what had once seemed an affliction may evolve itself into a blessing. It may be so even with a strong pipe.

"There's my friend Grimsby, who works in the same office with me. When Grimsby came in and sat down at his desk and calmly lighted that pipe and smoked away I wanted to flee, or at least to open all the windows. There is about that pipe a piercing pungency, an acid acridity, a general all around odoriferousness that I should hesitate duly to describe. It is all the strong pipes I ever knew bottled into one, and Grimsby sits there and calmly smokes it, never thinking of doing any harm, but with every evidence of serene enjoyment, while all the rest of us straggle.

"But now see how even such a pipe as this may be turned into a benefit, a boon. I suppose you have read in the papers all about the increased cost of living: how everything has gone up, and that sort of thing; and to be sure this has hit me along with the rest, and where I live we've had to do some pretty tall figuring, cutting down and cutting down, to make both ends meet. Situated as I am, it takes a good deal of a financial mathematician to do this.

"You can't very well, for instance, shorten the clothes of growing children, nor give them less to eat when what they want is more, but we've figured and figured and carved and carved and carved, and finally we got things down so that our accounts would balance at the end of the week without carrying anything over, and we held it that way for a few weeks and then, cut as we might, there came a week when we struck a little balance on the wrong side of the ledger, and then Mrs. Philmstack says to me:

"'Horace, I guess you'll have to cut out the tobacco.'

"You know I'm a smoker, a moderate smoker, myself, and I will admit that the prospect of going without my regular smoke did not seem very pleasant to me; but the rest were going without, why shouldn't I? And so when the order went out like that, why, I simply cut the tobacco.

"I don't mind saying that it was a trial to me and I went to the office next morning feeling pretty lean and glum. I missed my smoke sure enough; I didn't feel in my usual trim; not much like going to work.

"Then Grimsby came in and he lit his pipe and Ah-h-h! Grimsby's pipe had turned to a blessing! Very quietly I let my fellow clerks in on this, on the little fine points in economy, and they've all cut out tobacco, and now, though he doesn't know it, Grimsby smokes for the whole office."

His Land or His Lass

By Martha McCulloch-Williams

(Copyright, 1909 by Associated Literary Press.)

"I do wonder," Mrs. Page began plaintively.

Her sister, Sue Andrew, interrupted snappishly: "What? You wonder so much, I'd wonder if you didn't for a whole hour."

"Well! I can't help thinking about Sonny. You don't understand, Susan—you never had a boy, nor minded what you had on. But I'm 'fraid college is going to go mighty hard with him. Boys that have to wear homemade shirts and earn their own spending money it seems to me had better keep at home."

"Shut up, Agnes! You make me sick!" Sue said, stamping her foot. "It is just your way—you'll be writing the boy word to quit. Patience knows, he's got load enough without that. Every Page from great-grandfathers down has been through college. Do you reckon he' the very last of 'em, wants to grow up and loaf—and stay poor forever?"

"He always loved the land so—dumb creatures and sheep were a heap more to him than books," Mrs. Page protested. "At least, until he fell in with Molly Glen, and you put at him to turn lawyer and marry into her father's firm. As if she'd wait all that long time! Why, she's got beaux by dozens."

"She'll wait—never you fear," Miss Sue said confidently. "Can you keep a secret? Well! she herself told me to tell Billy she would. Her pap ain't in a hurry to part with her—besides, he thinks the world and all of Son—of William, I mean. We've got to get out of using that baby name. Molly said he did—said daddy would lend William all the money he needed. I tell you she took my breath away, speaking out so. But we couldn't have that, you know—Son—William, must get his education without being beholden except to his own. We can mortgage the place if the pinch comes too hard—but it won't be for Glen money."

"I—I Hope You Don't Mind—Much."

"I'd—I'd—rather sell it," Mrs. Page half whispered. "I will—if Sonny can't get through without. But Jeemes, my husband, charged me, last thing of all, never to make no mortage to nobody—and I'll mind him."

"I hope there'll be no need—the crop's looking fine," Miss Sue said comfortingly. "Don't you worry, Agnes. You'll live to ride in your carriage yet—once William gets a start. I know his way—he won't stop short of the top."

The crop fulfilled its promise—and rather more. It brought a fine price, likewise, and Sonny, away at college, was let know he might, if he chose, come home at Christmas. But he resisted the temptation. "I'll wait for Easter recess," he wrote. "I want to see the woods in bloom, and smell the plowing."

He did come at Easter, high-hearted, full of joy and hope. In a day he was far otherwise. Things were going ill on the place. His aunt and his mother did their very best, but they had to depend on hired men or croppers to keep up the fences, to plow, and sow, and plant. The stock looked unthrifty—all but the fowls and the milk cows—to them Miss Sue herself gave care.

Billy gave over all holiday plans and set himself sedulously to work. He had ten days free and in course of them he went just once to see Molly. She was as charming as ever and reproached him sweetly for not coming earlier, and especially for slighting her Easter picnic and her party later.

Judge Glen was more than cordial—mightily interested in William's plans and progress.

"Remember, we, all the country indeed, expect you to live up to the name," he said. "Your grandfather was in the senate—I hope to see you headed for it, at least, before I quit seeing anything."

Sonny went home, his head whirling. He knew he stood in sight of the parting of the ways. He could keep on at college; he could even hope to make a record there. He had a good clear brain, and a strong clean body to back it. Further, he had the grit to constrain his inclination.

Land-love, land-hunger, was in his blood, but he could also find interest in the law. He would never love it as he loved the world outdoors, but it was not alien nor repellent to him. Moreover, it led to Molly. He could not doubt that—she had as good as told him so. She would never be allowed to marry William Page, farmer, but William Page, her father's junior partner, would be a match quite acceptable to the paternal mind.

Over against all that there was his mother, a figure of pathos, of piety and resignation. She would turn herself out of house and home for Sonny's advantage, and do it not merely in meek uncomplaint, but with a sort of painful joy. Aunt Susan, likewise, although she was of tougher fiber, and more filled with ambition, yet the home's passing would hit her hard.

How would they manage through the long years before he got on in his profession? If, lacking him, the place was already falling away from itself, its income would have dwindled to the vanishing point by the time he was ready to earn a living. That meant it would have to be sold outright by the time he was half way through. He wanted to be a great man with part of himself, but there was another, a stronger part, that pleaded for the home and those it sheltered.

He could only listen faintly then. He was going back on the morrow. But it was not so long to term end. Afterward? He thought no further. Instead, very sensibly, he went to sleep. And when the charm of college life had again laid hold on him he somehow shunted the conflict to the very back of his mind.

He got through commencement with such mild honors as are possible to freshmen. Molly was there to see him, but he did not dance with her. In spite of Aunt Sue's pleadings, he had no festal garments. So the dances knew him not.

Indeed, it was the things he felt in honor bound to forego that brought to life again the Easter struggle. It was lively even before he reached home and found again the lack of the master's hand and eye. He flung himself ardently into righting things—so ardently that Miss Sue shook her head. Molly also complained—William never had time for her. William—even his mother no longer called him Sonny—gulped a little as he listened, but said nothing.

He was still fighting his battle—a hard one for a lad of twenty. All summer it raged within him, now one force, now the other, getting the best of it.

College would have won if he had not loved Molly so well. In the light of that love he knew some part of what he meant to his mother. He would not leave her to loneliness, to poverty, at last to homelessness. She might not live to see him retrieve everything.

So one still, starlit August night he said to Molly, very low, the words like sobs almost:

"I'm not going back; it would be wrong because of mother." Then, more quickly, but very, very humbly: "I—I hope you don't mind—much. I know you never—could—marry a—a farmer."

"I believe I might—if only he would ask me," Molly said, reaching out her hand. "Billy, you're a goose, a big goose," she said. "But we mean to save you—aunt Sue and I. You shan't have to give up either your land or your lass."

POWER IN FALLS OF NIAGARA

Only About 5.5 Per Cent. Being Utilized—Many Industries Attracted by Electrical Conditions.

A recent article in the Electrical World contains the following data relative to the utilization of the energy from Niagara Falls. Of the 5,000,000 horse-power represented by Niagara Falls, only about 5.5 per cent. is being utilized. Of this, 126,800 horse-power is employed in electro-chemical processes, 56,200 horse-power for railway service, 36,400 horse-power for lighting, 45,540 horse-power for various industrial services, 12,300 horse-power is transmitted over more than one hundred miles, 33,500 horse-power between 75 miles and 100 miles, 3,100 horse-power 50 miles, 79,640 horse-power between 10 and 30 miles, while 145,400 horse-power is used locally, showing that many industries have been attracted to Niagara Falls because of the favorable electric power conditions to be found there.

Kites Old and New.

Down the street the boys are flying kites. They are generally store kites, made up of bird-like forms and vivid colors. This is not the kite of the boyhood of other days, when the boys had unlimited fun. They made their own kites. There was no touch of commercialism in the sport of those days. The boy's genius was the imperial circumstance. The kites in those fair Hellenic days were six cornered affairs, made of three sticks, some string and a newspaper. The paste used in sticking the paper to the string, connecting the ends of the sticks, was made of flour and cold water. In these degenerate days such paste would not stick at all, but then it did. And the tail of that kite—what a glory!—a long string with bits of paper tied on at six-inch intervals, making it look like the spine of a great snake. How proud it seemed undulating up there in the blue! Then kite flying was closely interwoven with the genius of the boy. He had to depend upon himself. But it was a loving task from the whittling of the slim sticks to the tying on of the tail. But the great joy at last was to use his creation, floating up in the azure, as if it was a part of the glory of the world.—Ohio State Journal.

The busier a man is, the better able is he to throw his energy into other work.

MERE MAN OUTBID BY WOMAN

Los Angeles Widow Wins Yuma Farm From Wyoming Man at Recent Auction Sale.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Outbid by a woman. This was the experience of Edward B. Milner from the plains of Wyoming, in the contest for Yuma farm unit G 22, which was auctioned at the United States land office.

Mrs. Mary E. Delo, widow, residing in this city, was the woman who refused to be outdone by a mere man.

The price paid was $201.

The land for which Mrs. Delo and Mr. Milner were bidding was a farm unit which went by default, the successful applicant in the drawing having failed to make the first payment within the ten-day period.

When Receiver Robinson offered this strip of land at auction a contest for the farm was begun.

It did not require the perception of a sage to see that the land was wanted by both Mr. Milner and Mrs. Delo.

As quickly as one bid, the price was raised by the other contestant for the farm. Rapidly the price was bid up to $100, and then increased steadily until it had soared to $200. At this figure a friend of Milner persuaded him to withdraw from the bidding, and no person seemed willing to raise the price of $201 bid by Mrs. Delo.

Receiver Robinson declared that Mrs. Delo had purchased the first right to file an entry on farm unit G 33 of the Yuma land project for $201. In addition to this amount, it will be necessary for Mrs. Delo to pay the regular government price of $65 an acre.

Defeated in this quarter, but determined to have a Yuma farm, Mr. Milner studied the blue print showing the location of the various units, and selected a section which had been allowed to go by default by the original applicant, and filed an entry on it without paying any money except the regulation price of $65 an acre.

It was farm unit C 33, and Mrs. Delo and Mr. Milner will be near neighbors.

AUTO TRIPS CAUSE BALDNESS

Woman Must Choose Between Fewer Rides or Less Hair, Says Noted Dermatologist.

Boston.—It is apparent from what Dr. C. J. White, dermatologist at the Massachusetts General hospital, says that women must either cut down the number of auto trips or run the awful chances of becoming bald. The noted authority says motoring is bad for the hair.

"Usually women neglect to properly cover their heads, with the result that they are compelled to take too many shampoos," Doctor White said. "Washing the hair and scalp once a month is often enough for a skin which is normal. A shampoo every other day or so, or even once a week, will produce baldness, and after a person reaches twenty-five or thirty years of age it is impossible to cure abnormal falling out of hair."

The problem is that if women want to go motoring they must completely cover the hair, but that keeps out the air and produces baldness. If they permit the dust to get on the scalp and then submit to the wicked shampoo they will also lose their hair. The only safe way is to reduce the number of auto trips.

Where Bacon Lived.

Fulwood's Rents, the little Holborn court leading into Gray's Inn Gardens, which will be largely rebuilt, formerly possessed the privilege of "sanctuary," and hence became a notorious resort for fraudulent debtors and still more unpleasant characters. Yet this dingy "dive" can boast of many glorious memories. Francis Bacon lived here in "Fulwood's House" and valued his furniture at £60, a huge price for that period. Here the Whig club and Melbourne and Oates' club met in the reign of Charles II., and here stood Squire's coffee house, from which several numbers of the Spectator were dated.—Westminster Gazette.

Laxative for Women Free

There is a great difference in the purposes to which a laxative should be put. Tablets and pills, salts, etc., are usually violent purgatives or cathartics, and altogether too powerful for the average person.

A woman at all times needs only a mild laxative—in fact, none other is needed by anyone, weak or strong though they may be, for the object is simply to move the bowels, and if a gentle laxative will do it, what is the use of a violent one?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has earned a well-deserved vogue among women and children and old folks—people who must necessarily be careful of what they take.

It is a liquid laxative tonic and admittedly the greatest stomach, liver and bowel remedy before the American people. The price is only 50 cents or $1 a bottle, as it comes in both sizes, and all druggists sell it. Its pleasant taste and gentle action make it an ideal remedy for women in constipation, torpid liver, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn and such like digestive complaints. Its use for a short time will remove the trouble entirely so that future medication will be unnecessary. Its tonic properties build up the stomach and intestinal muscles so that they act naturally again. That this is so is the experience of many heads of families, like Mrs. Brannan, of Alvarado, Va., Mrs. K. L. Stout, of Louisville, Ky., and numerous others; in fact, way out in Williams, Cal., as Mrs. J. E. Blackmore, of that place, writes, the whole town seems to be using it.

If the remedy is new to you and you want to make a trial of it before buying, send your name to the doctor's address as below and a free test bottle will be sent you. Then, if results are satisfactory you can buy it of your druggist.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

THIS DOG CAN COUNT HOURS

Acts as Alarm Clock for Early-Rising New Jersey Farmer—Wants His Breakfast.

Beverly, N. J.—Promptly at 4:30 o'clock every morning John Paesner, a farmer, arises and begins his day's work. He does not bother about alarm clocks any more, for he places more reliance in his hound dog Spot, who sleeps outdoors and who a few minutes before 4:30 begins an unearthly howl.

Paesner knows from experience it is useless to try to prolong his sleep, for the dog's yelps will not cease until his master comes down to him.

Paesner gives a simple explanation of how the dog became such a reliable alarm. When he used the clock the first thing he would do after getting up would be to see if Spot was all right and throw him a piece of meat. The dog now looks for his breakfast at that hour, and for three months has not varied five minutes in time.

The Canaanitish Woman

Sunday School Lesson for June 13, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 15:21-28. Memory verses, 21, 22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt."—Matt. 15:28.

TIME.—Early summer of A. D. 29, a few weeks after the last lesson.

PLACE.—On the borders of the country of Tyre and Sidon, forty or fifty miles northwest of the Sea of Galilee.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

Hatred That Repulses Christ.—V. 21. Why did Jesus leave Capernaum and Galilee?

Already at the time of his highest fame, the cloud had arisen that was to cover the whole sky. When, interpreting the feeding of the five thousand, Christ insisted upon spiritual food and not literal bread as the supreme gift to men (John 6:23-71), many even of his disciples were offended and walked no more with him. We have already seen (lesson 7) the delegates from the scribes and Pharisees of Jerusalem as they watched him to catch him in some word or act by which they could bring a charge against him.

What was this charge that the Pharisees sought? That the disciples of Jesus ate with unwashed hands—not hands that we would consider unclean, but hands that had not been washed according to the Pharisaic rules that had grown up.

What position did Christ take regarding such observances? That the Pharisees were hypocritical, wasting their thought and time on empty regulations while they transgressed the real law of God.

What was the importance of this controversy? "These twenty verses (Matt. 15:1-20) sum up the great controversy of the New Testament," that between the religion of the letter and external obstacles and the religion of the heart, between what St. Paul calls "the righteousness which is of the law and the righteousness which is of God by (or grounded upon) faith," Phil. 3:9."—Cambridge Bible.

What was the effect of the controversy on Christ? This hatred and bitter opposition drove Jesus into retirement again.

Where did he go this time, with his disciples? Into the coasts (borders, region) of Tyre and Sidon. These flourishing seaports, the capitals of Phoenicia, are not far from the Sea of Galilee, Tyre only about 35 and Sidon 55 miles.

Love That Christ Seeks.—V. 22. How did Christ succeed in his plans for rest? "He could not be hid," says Mark.

Who broke into our Lord's retreat? As we might expect, a mother! Her daughter (Mark tells us that it was a little girl) was grievously vexed with a devil.

How did this mother approach Jesus? She must have forced her way into the house against opposition. She fell at Christ's feet (Mark) and cried, doubtless over and over: "Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David."

The Suppliant Tested.—Vs. 23-27. Those that pray are usually tested. This is not to inform Christ whether they are sincere or not, since he knows all hearts.

The First Test was the difference in race, nationality and religion. She was by language a Greek (see Mark), and we have no knowledge that our Lord spoke Greek. By nationality she was a Canaanite, of the blood of the original inhabitants of the land, descendants of Ham.

How did the woman overcome these obstacles? By calling Jesus "Lord" and "son of David," thus showing some knowledge of the Jewish Messiah.

The Second Test was silence. "He answered her not a word."

How did this woman meet this test of silence? By her persistence; she continued her beseeching cries.

The Third Test was the opposition of the disciples.

How did Christ answer the disciples' selfish urgings? By a remarkable statement of the unity and restrictions of his mission: "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

How did the mother meet this new obstacle? By ignoring the disciples and going straight to Jesus once more.

The Fourth Test was an absolute denial from the lips of Jesus, or what seemed such: "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs."

How did the mother meet this obstacle? "Truth, Lord, yet dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table."

The Suppliant Rewarded.—V. 28. How did Jesus receive this saying? With evident and profound satisfaction: "O woman, great is thy faith."

How was the noble mother rewarded for her persistence and faith? By the complete cure of the little girl from that very hour, the precise moment when Christ had pronounced the words of healing.

Illustration. "Everywhere faith, or the capacity of receiving, has a power to claim and demand the thing which it needs. You plant a healthy seed into the ground. The soil acknowledges its power; no sooner does it feel the seed than it replies; it unlocks all its treasures of force; the little hungry black kernel is its master. 'O seed, great is thy faith,' the ground seems to say; 'be it unto thee even as thou wilt;' and so the miracle of growth begins."—Phillips Brooks.

It is persevering. It recognizes the meaning of God's silences, as did the Canaanite of our lesson.

SEARCH FOR GERMS

Series of Experiments Made With Milk as Typhoid Generator.

Microbes Found to Exist in Field Kept Forty Days, According to Report of Agent of Department of Agriculture.

Washington.—In view of the fact that much of the typhoid fever in Washington has been traced to milk infection, the department of agriculture has made a series of experiments to determine how long typhoid germs will remain alive in milk and butter under ordinary market conditions. The result is to show that the germs will remain active in milk much longer than milk is ever kept before being consumed—namely, forty days—and that in the case of butter the germs have been found active and ready for business at the end of 151 days. This has led to an urgent recommendation by the department for all handlers of dairy products to sterilise milk before it is either sold as milk or made into butter.

The series of experiments was carried on by Henry J. Washburn of the pathological division. He says the investigations of the marine hospital service in connection with typhoid in Washington showed that for three years there was an average of 10 per cent. of the cases directly traceable to milk infection. Considering the fact, he says, that typhoid is a disease that is present throughout the country all the time and everywhere, this 10 per cent. of infection represents an immense amount of preventable sickness. He thinks that 15 per cent. would not be an excessive rating as the proportion of typhoid due to dairy infection.

The department tried one experiment to see whether pure milk from cows ever carried typhoid. For this test a preparation of active typhoid germs was fed to a cow and her milk was tested. It was found, however, that the stomach of the cow seemed to throw off the infection and nothing harmful was found in the milk. It is stated that milk is an excellent medium for breeding typhoid germs if any get into the milk from outside.

Tests were made at the laboratory, and it was found that clean milk infected with a healthy colony of germs was swarming with them in a few hours. There are so many ways in which milk can easily get infected with typhoid that it was thought worth while to see how long the infection lasted after it was once established.

For this purpose some milk was intentionally infected with typhoid germs and was then churned into butter, the buttermilk strained off, the butter salted and packed as though for commercial storage. This butter was kept in tight jars in an ice chest at the laboratory and was tested every day. A plate was made of a little butter and microscopically examined for typhoid. The germs proved to be active from the first day.

As the test progressed, there would come days when the microscope would show no germs, but that was because the needle on which the butter was collected had passed through some part of the butter that was not infected before it was packed down. A similar test was sure to produce germs the next day.

This series of tests was continued for 151 days, and the one-hundred-and-fifty-first day was the last on which active germs were found. The tests were continued for eight days after that, but it was plain that the infection had died out.

The tests with the milk were made in the same general way. Milk was purposely infected and was then kept in a cool place and tested daily. It was found that the germs survived for forty days, and this was much longer than milk ever would be kept.

No tests were made with cheese, but enough was shown to convince the department that dairy products as a whole are a potent source of infection, and that it is essential to sterilise all milk as a matter of public safety.

WIFE MAY USE ROLLING PIN

Chicago Judge Declares Woman Has Perfect Right to Use It on Her Husband.

Chicago.—The using of the rolling pin is one of the inalienable rights of a woman, according to a decision handed down by Judge Newcomer in the municipal court the other day. The decision was made in a case brought by Mrs. Anna Vittengl, charging Vittengl with desertion. Vittengl said that his wife had beaten him with a rolling pin and he had left home. The judge declared Mrs. Vittengl had a right to use the rolling pin, and continued the case to give the couple an opportunity to effect a reconciliation.

Invasion of Teddy Bugs.

Plainfield, Conn.—Millions of "Teddy bugs" cover apple and pear trees and vegetable gardens here and in the surrounding country. The hum of their wings brought out the population, but all but the hardiest were driven indoors immediately. Women and children were forced to flee. Lanterns were darkened within a twinkling of the eye by the insects, which are of a kind never before seen about here, though resembling June bugs. Specimens were sent to Yale for classification.

Spoon All You Like.

Cleveland, O.—Chief J. E. Jones of the park police has drafted rules governing spooning in the parks. His rules are simple and were written with a view to making them easy for prospective spooners to learn.

"We will permit spooning in the parks," the chief said. "Who am I to blight love's young dream in the springtime?" Here are the rules:

"Hugging with one arm is permitted.

"Hugging with both arms is permitted.

"Kissing in clinches will be allowed.

"Only plain kissing will be allowed."

Money in Old Stove.

New York.—After she had sold an old stove the other day for 30 cents Miss Norah Sullivan, aged 70, of Newark, N. J., learned that it was really worth $600. A package which dropped from the stove, unnoticed by the purchaser, was picked up by two boys and found to contain 60 $10 gold pieces.

The money was turned over to the police and will probably be returned to Miss Sullivan.

Growth of African City.

Up to a few years ago the streets of the city of Laurenco Marques, the capital of Portuguese East Africa, were mere "rivers of sand," and transportation by automobile seemed as far off as aerial navigation. The white man was hauled laboriously through the sand in rickshaws and ladies went shopping swung in hammocks known as "mechillas." During the last decade, however, wonderful changes have taken place, so that to-day Laurenco Marques has 40 miles of macadam streets, with promise of more to follow.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

On Monday next, unless the clemency of the governor intervenes, a man is doomed to die—a soul is to be ushered into eternity. The gallows has been erected in the jail yard a Clanton and all preparations made for carrying out the dread sentence of the law. A murderer is to pay the penalty of his crime, and while the sun is shining and the breezes of heaven are gently blowing, a young and strong man, in the very prime of life, is to be hanged according to law.

And what must have been the sensations of the negro condemned to die, during the erection of the gallows within a few yards of his prison cell. Every stroke of the hammer was a veritable death knell, marking the moments as they swiftly pass by; every rasp of the saw sounded the cutting off of the few days left him in this world. A few more times the sun will rise and set and then all is over—the criminal has gone before the Great Judge.

The Birmingham Age-Herald last Thursday issued an interesting descriptive edition of its elegant new home, of which it is justly proud. The new building is a model of convenience for the publishing of a daily newspaper, and nothing seems to have been omitted. The Age-Herald is to be congratulated upon its prosperous condition.

Another interesting item respecting the Birmingham daily papers is that Robt. C. Hiden purchased one-tenth interest in the Ledger for $25,000, showing the business condition of that paper to be in excellent shape.

The Birmingham Daily News, under the management of Frank P. Glass and Victor Hanson, continues its progressive course, and makes a trio of daily papers gratifying to all Alabama.

With regret we learn that Rev. J. M. Woods, pastor of the Baptist church, has tendered his resignation of the pastorate. The reverend gentleman has endeared himself not only to his congregation but to all the good citizens of Clanton, who will be sorry indeed for him to leave us.

B. (Buck) Arledge Killed at Stumpe Hill.

Early on Tuesday morning a telephone message was received by Sheriff Catts, stating that C. B., better known as Buck, Arledge, had been shot and killed by his son, Elijah.

The sheriff at once went out to the scene, and returned at noon with Elijah Arledge in custody, and he was placed in jail.

From what we can learn, father and son had a dispute about six o'clock Tuesday morning when the shooting took place, Mr. Arledge dying immediately. The son is about 22 years of age.

A hearing was held Tuesday afternoon before J. P. VanDerveer, J. P., and Arledge was admitted to bail in the sum of $1000 on a charge of manslaughter. The preliminary examination was set for next Monday.

Never refer to a woman's age; some women have had the family bible suppressed on that account.

True Womanly Beauty.

No woman can be truly beautiful who has a yellow complexion caused by a torpid liver. To be beautiful a woman must have good health, and this can be accomplished by occasionly using St. Joseph's Liver Regulator (either liquid or powders, as you like best.) It keeps the bowels open, passing off the poisonous, effete matter, and in this way purifies the blood and assists in clearing the complexion. All women should occasionly use St. Joseph's Liver Regulator. Liquid, 50 cents a bottle; powders, 25 cents a box.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Clanton, Ala., May 14, 1910

Will the Editor Banner be kind enough to give me space in your paper to make a fair statement in regard to the case of Mr. Tompkin Littleton. I know that Judge Reynolds is not to blame in his conviction for disturbing public worship, as my evidence, with J. D. Smith and Mrs. Mary Traywick's testimony was enough. Well, I think if the Judge had voted against the amendment he would have been all right. It is strange that people want to take moral things and put them in politics. I am not in politics with the Judge as he is a Republican and I am a Democrat I think when you defeat him you will defeat one of the best men in your party. I will close with best wishes to all.

Our normal musical school begins Monday, July 11, under management of Prof. T. P. Stephens. Now, we want at least 200 pupils; the school begins July 11 and lasts 20 days. Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space in the dear old Banner to say a few words. The health of this community is very good at present. We had some rain this week. It is bad for farmers, they have got so much grass and they can't work for the rain. I saw in the Banner some one wrote a piece about a large crowd went to Maplesville the other Sunday and got disappointed. I guess there was but three got disappointed. The one who wrote the piece got disappointed, I know by his writing about it. There was some never got disappointed, I know. I never got disappointed, and I was there. I saw a piece in the Banner where a man lost his yard dog. He barked himself to death at candidates. I wouldn't kill him about barking at such sorry thing. I was sorry for the man that owned the dog; he was sorry for the candidates. I will close for this time. I will come again if this misses the waste basket; much love to the Banner and its many readers.

Expect to Find Oil at Thorsby.

Thorsby is excited over the claim that oil is to be found in abundance in that territory and that the future of Chilton county will depend upon the findings of a company which will soon be organized for the purpose of boring for oil.

Capt. P. Sid, district passenger agent for the Louisville and Nashville, stated yesterday afternoon that he was engaged in getting together about 50 of his friends to organize a company and bore for oil in Chilton county.

"I have not the least doubt but what oil will be found in Chilton in great abundance," said Captain Jones. "We have investigated in an offhand manner and I can state that the many Pennsylvanians who reside in Thorsby are of the opinion that oil is just under the ground.

"It is true that many of the people of that section have visited small streams nearby and dipped a pail into the stream. Upon emptying the pail a match will immediately light the damp substance clinging to the pail. The recent discovery of gas in Fayette county will be a passing affair compared with the oil of Chilton county."—Age-Herald.

Popwell School House.

Editor Banner:—Please give me a small space in your dear old paper to say a few words from this place.

Our Debating Society is progressing nicely. Our next debate will be held at Fairview, I suppose, but will say to "Democrat" in the Press of last week that I think he stated the subject right to the reverse to what it was agreed upon last fifth Saturday night at this place.

You see the boys here just organized about two months ago, and haven't had any experience in debates yet much, but we were challenged to meet the excellent orators of Fairview in a debate and we accepted, win or not win, we don't expect to win though, because you see some of these orators of Fairview have been going about over this part of the county debating and teaching democracy.

One of them is champion speakers of the democratic club they have organized down here. So on that particular night I expect we boys will feel as if we were called upon to speak in congress.

It seems like the rain of last Thursday night washed the farmers' land pretty bad.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely under the careful management of our Supt., Mr. M. F. Wagoner; wish we had more Superintendents like him and I am sure we would have more and better Sunday schools.

Wishing the Banner much success I will ring off.

Applies as well to our physical state as to material things. C. J. Budlong, Washington, R. I. realized his condition, and took warning before it was too late. This should be a warning to all not to neglect to take Foley's Kidney Remedy until it is too late." For sale by Upchurch Drug Co.

ROOSEVELT IS NOW HOMEWARD BOUND

Returning After a Memorable World Tour.

Theodore Roosevelt, homeward bound, has sailed on the Hamburg-American line steamer Kaiserin Auguste Victoria. The steamer is due at quarantine New York on the night of June 17, but the former president will not land in New York until the following morning.

When the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria turned her prow westward from Southampton, Eng., Mr. Roosevelt found himself on the final lap of what in many respects has been the most remarkable trip accomplished by a private citizen. At the head of the Smithsonian African scientific expedition, the former chief executive of the United States sailed on the steamer Hamburg from New York, March 23, 1909. Arriving at Naples he transferred to the steamer Admiral and continued his journey, stopping at Messina, where he met King Victor Emanuel, of Italy. He arrived at Mombasa on April 21, and soon afterwards the notable hunting expedition was begun, resulting in an unprecedented collection of African trophies.

After a long hunt in the wilds of Africa, he returned to civilization and was welcomed as a conquering hero.

All the crowned heads of Europe did the former president of the United States signal honor. He was the chief figure and honored guest at many notable functions in the most brilliant capitals of the old world and attended the funeral obsequies of the late King Edward VII as the special envoy of the United States.

And now, after a worldwide reception and with honors heaped upon honors, the strenuous American is returning to his own shores.

A rousing welcome is being prepared for the former president when he lands in New York.

POSTAL BANK BILL.

Passed at Washington by Overwhelming Majority.

By the overwhelming vote of 195 to 101 the national house of representatives has passed the postal savings bank bill. Twenty-four democrats joined the republicans in voting for the final passage of the bill.

The democratic substitute for the bill of the majority was rejected, 113 to 196. This action followed an entire session devoted to a debate upon the subject of postal savings bank legislation.

The measure has already passed the senate, having been introduced there by Senator Carter, of Montana. Agreement between the two houses in conference will not be difficult.

This legislation is expected to place in the hands of government for safe-keeping or investment in government bonds several billions of dollars. As an incident to the safe-keeping of this vast sum it is predicted that a central bank will inevitably be organized; in fact, that one will be almost imperative.

THREE DAYS CAST AWAY.

But Survivors Kept Up Brave Fight and Were Finally Rescued.

After a three days' fight for life in two small boats, 450 miles out in the Atlantic ocean, Miss Elizabeth Eriksson, her father, Capt. P. A. Eriksson, nine men composing the crew, two dogs and a cat, who were rescued by the British steamer Metis, after having abandoned their barkentine, The Good News, of Philadelphia, are now safe on land.

Struck by a heavy storm The Good News sprang a leak. All hands remaining continually at the pumps, failed to keep her afloat and the ship was abandoned. At times it seemed as though the two little boats would be swamped by huge waves. A sail was rigged and one boat towed the other. Three days and nights passed with only a little hard bread and a half gallon of water for provisions before the Metis hove in sight.

ALLEGED COTTON STEAL.

Tennessee Grand Jury Will Probe Charge That Shipments Were Stolen.

According to a story printed in a Memphis paper, evidence tending to show that more than $100,000 worth of cotton was stolen from railroads during the season of 1908-09 is now in the possession of the Shelby county grand jury. If a true bill is returned, it is said, a number of prominent men will be involved.

The investigation is said to have developed the fact that a half-dozen or more negro dray drivers were made the tools of the thieves-in-chief. It is said the drivers would receive the cotton and in place of delivering it to the warehouses to which it was consigned, would deliver it to the place designated by the "fences."

This place, it is stated, was equipped to remove every vestige of the identification marks, the bagging being taken off and destroyed and replaced with new bagging, the cotton then being disposed of.

THREE KILLED IN WRECK.

Three men were killed outright and twelve injured when Iron Mountain fast mail for Texas, which carried no passengers, left the tracks near St. Louis and crashed through the brick wall of a manufacturing plant.

The bodies of Engineer Walter B. Douglas, of De Soto, Mo., and Fireman R. D. Shepard, of St. Louis, were not found until long after firemen who had responded to an alarm arrived to aid the survivors of the crew. The body of Mail Clerk Jasper L. Lasater, of St. Louis, was found in his car, which had been crushed by another car.

LONE BANDIT ROBS AN ENTIRE TRAIN

With Utmost Coolness Took Passengers' Valuables.

Eastbound train No. 2, of the El Paso and Southwestern railroad, was held up by a lone bandit, who herded the occupants of the tourist sleeper into a private car attached to the rear of the train, compelled them to deposit their money and valuables in a heap and made his escape with the plunder across the desert toward the mountains. Rough estimates place the value of his haul at several thousand dollars.

The hold-up occurred one mile east of Robsart, N. M., near Corrizozo. At this point the robber, who had boarded the train at Corrizozo, covered the Pullman conductor and brakeman with his gun, compelling them to stop the train.

Driving the men before him, he entered the sleeping car, awakening the occupants with a gruff command to gather their valuables together and proceed to the private car of Superintendent G. F. Hawks, in the rear.

One by one the half-dressed passengers were covered by the robber's gun as they clambered from their berths. Taking his time and exhibiting remarkable coolness, the bandit carefully took an inventory of what each bore in his uplifted hands. The job was thorough, not a passenger escaping and not one being able to keep anything of value.

The robber is believed to be an old and dangerous bandit who may give the officers who have started in pursuit a lively battle if he is run down.

FLORIDA PRIMARY.

Broward Wins Senatorial Toga—Largest Vote Ever Cast in State.

With 82 per cent of the vote cast in the second Florida primary reported, the vote stands: Broward, 19,731; Taliaferro, 18,923. This lead of 808 will probably be increased to between 1,200 and 1,500 by the total vote.

The remaining vote unreported will in nearly every case give a Broward majority, although it is expected that Taliaferro's gains will be material. The Taliaferro faction conceded the election of ex-Governor Broward to the senate.

The largest vote in the history of Florida, and probably the greatest political interest, were features of the second primary.

HELD UP AT PIPE'S POINT.

Ludicrous Manner in Which Tables Were Turned on Burglars.

Three burglars with pockets bulging with loot were held up at the point of a briarwood pipe in Brooklyn in the back room of a saloon by a clerk of the hardware merchant whom they had robbed, and marched tamely to jail.

They were an angry set of men when they realized that their captor's courage had been keener-edged than their own wits.

SERIOUS UPRISING OCCURS IN MEXICO

Towns are Sacked and People Slain by Maya Indians.

The most serious uprising with which the Mexican government has had to deal in a long time has occurred in the state of Yucatan, and troops are being rushed to the disturbed area. In the meantime, reports which have reached Vera Cruz indicate that there has been much bloodshed and that the insurgents are preparing for a battle with the government forces.

Dispatches from Merida, the capital of Yucatan, state that forty persons were killed by the Maya Indians.

Further dispatches received here state that 5,000 of these Indian insurgents sacked the town of Valladolid, ninety-five miles to the southeast of Merida, killing all the principal government employes, the chief of police and others. They seized rifles and pistols and instituted a reign of terror. Many of the inhabitants of Valladolid are fleeing to Merida.

Railroad and telegraph communication between Merida and the scene of the trouble is now cut off. Twenty miles of the Yucatan railroad have been destroyed by the Indians. It is reported that many telegraph operators have been killed or are prisoners.

It is understood that the cause of the trouble is dissatisfaction on the part of the Indians over the action of government officials regarding lands.

EARTHQUAKE SPREADS RUIN.

Many Deaths and Great Property Damage Has Been Reported.

A severe earth shock has caused a number of deaths and much property damage in central Campania. The disturbance appears to have centered in the province of Avellino.

Telegraph wires were torn down and communication with the affected district was broken. Meager information received indicates that the greatest damage was done at Calitri, Avellino province.

Calitri is said to have been half destroyed and twenty people are reported to have been killed there.

Other deaths occurred at Valata, nearby, and it is feared that fatalities will be reported from other villages which for a time, are cut off from communication with this city.

The shock occurred while the people were still in their beds. Many houses at Malitri tumbled, burying the occupants in the ruins.

Those who escaped death or serious injury fled terror-stricken from their homes and into the country. None waited to don street clothes and as a result many subsequently suffered from exposure.

Troops were dispatched from all quarters into the affected districts as soon as the loss of life and property damage became known to the government and the officials of nearby cities.

ROBBED ON SLEEPER.

William Miner Has Traveling Bag With Fortune Stolen.

That William Miner, president of the William M. Miner Company, of Chicago, was robbed of $50,000 while en route from Chicago to New York last Thursday, has become known at New York. Detectives have been working on the case, but no announcement had heretofore been made, as it was hoped that the thieves might be caught while trying to dispose of some of the negotiable paper included in the amount lost.

The money, it is said, was in a traveling bag which he had at his side in his berth in the sleeping car. He did not discover his loss until he reached his hotel in New York.

About half the sum was in the shape of a negotiable letter of credit on which payment has been stopped.

A TRAGIC FATE.

Unknown Man Brained While Hanging Out of Car Window.

Considerable excitement was caused among passengers on Southern train No. 30 just north of Toccoa, Ga., when an unidentified white man, bearing a ticket from Tucson, Ariz., to New York, in an effort to jump from a car window, was grabbed by a negro Pullman porter.

The man's body was dangling through the window when the porter caught him by the feet, the result being that instead of rolling beneath the cars, the man was literally brained by his head striking against the walls of the rocky cut through which the train was passing.

MISSIONARIES SAFE.

Presbyterian Board Receives Reassuring Cablegrams from Missionaries.

The Presbyterian board of foreign missions received reassuring reports from their missionary at Nanking, Henchow and Chenchow. The two latter places are Hunan provinces.

"All is quiet," was the answer received from each of the missions named, over whose safety alarm was felt at the receipt of the disturbing reports of the past few days. Cablegrams of inquiry were sent out last week.

President Taft thereupon stated that the administration's purpose in bringing the injunction suit had been accomplished and the suit would be discontinued.

NOTES FROM NATION'S CAPITAL Democratic leaders in the house claim they have discovered the "joker" in the final amendments to the railroad bill which would enable railroads to return to the practice of rebating. It is found in a clause establishing a penalty for the misquoting of rates to shippers. It is asserted that railroads might even "confess damage" as the result of a misquoted rate and pay to the favored shipper rebates under the guise of damages.

FOR SHIRT WAISTS

BOX THAT WILL BE FOUND A GREAT CONVENIENCE.

Expenditure of a Few Cents and Some Patience Is All That Is Required—Can Be Made in a Morning.

A shirt-waist box is a great convenience in any household, and a joy every day for those who have a summer home with restricted closet room. Everybody can own one of these simple comforts, if willing to expend a few cents and a little patience.

Buy of your grocer one of the large cracker boxes with a cover for 15 cents; a pair of hinges, 10 cents; two yards of cretonne for from 15 to 20 cents a yard; a yard and a half of plain or blue cambric for 5 cents a yard; a roll of the cheapest grade of cotton batting for 10 cents to pad the top of the cover; a package of small black tacks and ditto of brass ones. A tack hammer completes the list.

Measure the bottom and sides of the box. With a pencil plan the lining, stitching all the seams on a machine, and drop the lining in the exact shape into the box, driving a tack at each corner to keep it in place. Let the lining lap over all edges and tack here and there.

Crease a hem on each edge of the cretonne and let it go straight around the box, lengthwise of the cloth. The lap should be in the middle of the back and fastened with a row of the small black tacks. It is well to let the lining cover the padding and carefully form the shape of the padded top before tacking on the cretonne. It is a matter of taste where to use the brass headed tacks.

The box can be made in a morning and will be appreciated for months to come.

Many do not think it wise to use paste in any part of the box as it may stain through the lining in very hot weather. Others like to use paste instead of tacks on the outside. For the benefit of those who do this recipe for paste will be acceptable:

The ingredients are gluten flour, alum, and water. To one cup of gluten, or whole wheat flour, add one cup of cold water, and mix them well together. Then add two or three cups of boiling water, stirred slowly in. Boil, and stir five minutes, or until it clarifies, and then add one teaspoonful of powdered alum dissolved in cold water. This glue will keep for a week or more if put in a jar or bowl without a lid. To cover it is to sour it.

Any one who makes one shirt-waist box at home will be enthusiastic over the ease with which such an attractive and useful article can be made at home, and will certainly plan to make more than one.

Light is a natural stimulus to the hair, and it has been noticed that those going much without hats are never afflicted with baldness. A summer in the country or at the seashore has done wonders for the girl with a sickly crop of hair. Every woman who can afford the time should sit for several hours a week in the open sunshine and let the air and hot rays play in and out of the loose flying hair.

COAT FOR CHILD.

These illustrations show the back and front of a pretty, simple coat for a child.

It is made of cloth and has a reversible collar of the same, bordered with a silk or satin fold to match, which also borders the cuffs.

The coat is trimmed on the shoulders and in front with silk cord and buttons.

An Idea in Comfortables.

New comfortables are made and quilted in the usual way, but instead of having the only covering of silk or satine, they are inclosed in fine cheesecloth.

A bag of any desired material is made to fit this comfortable. It has an opening at one end through which the quilt is slipped. This is sewed by hand or is supplied with tiny buttons and buttonholes.

The covering is tacked to the quilt in various places, so that it looks like the ordinary quilted comfortable, but it is the work of a few minutes to remove the stitches and take off the cover when laundering is necessary.

Makes Satisfactory Progress.

Work on the New York state barge canal goes on in a satisfactory manner, and it seems likely, says the Scientific American, that the great undertaking will be completed not only within the contract time, but within the contract price ($101,000,000) as well. Work reaching $16,000,000 has already been done, and the work under contract now aggregates $54,138,329. The estimate for this work made in 1903 was over $2,500,000 in excess of the above figure. These contracts cover 314 miles of canal (the total length of which will be 442 miles). Fifteen of the 54 locks are practically finished.

Portable Dog Kennels for Hotels.

Hotels, according to an article in the Hotel World, should be provided with portable dog kennels to be rented to the guests who insist on taking their dogs to rooms. Such a kennel should be about four feet long and of a width that would allow it to go through the door of a room. It should be constructed of wood, lined part way up with zinc or sheet metal. The upper part should be covered with open wire work, and the bottom should be provided with broad-tread casters.—Popular Mechanics.

The Teacher.

The teacher should strive first to be a man or a woman in the best sense of the term, strong mentally, morally and physically, with personality and independence, but without rudeness. He should command respect as a thinking person, avoid eccentricities and partisan measures, have opinions of his own, but without flaunting them in the face of others to provoke combat or opposition. Then to the respect due him as a man will come, if his teaching justifies, the additional respect due him as a teacher.

turn sits in the top of the milk can, c, writes A. L. Uphan, in Farm and Home. The pail, a, is set about two feet above the strainer, and as the milk drops slowly into the strainer it is cooled and aerated.

Of course, this device must be used only in a room where the air is comparatively pure. If it were used in the milk stables where there are plenty of undesirable odors, the result would be disastrous instead of beneficial.

"But I insist."

"No, I really prefer to ride this way."

"My dear lady, I could not permit you to do so. I should not feel at all comfortable sitting here while you clung to that strap."

"Don't let it bother you for a moment, I implore you."

"Ah, you are very kind to say that, but I still insist on giving you my place. I, if you will pardon me for saying so, am not one of those who can be insensible of the courtesy that is due to the ladies. I come of southern stock. Please take my seat."

"Oh, pshaw! If you must know it, I am wearing a new corset and couldn't sit down if I wished to."

Hard Put.

"Some people seem to have an idea that if they don't make a great deal of noise the world will forget they are alive."

"Yes, and they are the kind of people who can't attract attention any other way."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

A Woman's Great Idea

is how to make herself attractive. But without health it is hard for her to be lovely in face, form or temper. A weak, sickly woman will be nervous and irritable. Constipation and Kidney poisons show in pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. But Electric Bitters always prove a godsend to women who want health, beauty and friends. They regulate Stomach, Liver and Kidneys, purify the blood; give strong nerves, bright eyes, pure breath, smooth, velvety skin, lovely complexion, good health. Try them. 50c. at Upchurch Drug Co.

A Land Boom the Most Dangerous.

A thousand-dollar farm mortgage may be twice as sound as a given thousand-dollar railroad bond. And a deed to ten good wheat acres may have three times the intrinsic value of ten shares of a certain railroad stock. But the bond or stock can be sold in a hurry at times when the mortgage or the land cannot—times when money rates are rising and markets are falling.

When a stock boom collapses, as in 1907, enormous transactions take place. The community gets the money as soon as prices sink low enough to offer the "bargains" that appeal to foreign and thrifty home investors.

But the collapse of a land boom is attended by an intense quiet. Comparatively speaking, there are no sales at all. It may be a matter of years before values climb up to prices. It took months to cure '07, but years to cure '93.

Again: There is no "short selling" as with stocks and bonds and even food products and cotton, to keep a land boom down once it reaches the point of a craze. It may be immoral for a man to sell what he hasn't got. But it is mighty useful, as the great students of economics whose works are accepted in this country and abroad all agree, to allow those of cynical mind and cold blood to express their opinions in cold cash. Such expression is wonderfully cooling to a speculative fever, be it in shares or in short ribs.

A repetition of these elementary principles will seem less unnecessary when one considers that for half a generation there has been steady growth in the real value of farms between the Alleghanies and the Rockies, while during this period stock exchange manias and collapses have become familiar.—Review of Reviews for June.

Pain in Heart

"For two years I had pain in my heart, back and left side. Could not draw a deep breath or lie on left side, and any little exertion would cause palpitation. Under advice I took Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and Nervine. I took about thirteen bottles, am in better health than I ever was, and have gained 14 pounds."

MRS. LILLIE THOMAS,
Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

For many years Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy has been very successful in the treatment of heart troubles, because of its tonic effect upon the heart nerves and muscles. Even in severe cases of long standing it has frequently prolonged life for many years after doctors had given up all hope, as proven by thousands of letters we have received from grateful people.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy is sold by all druggists. If the first bottle fails to benefit, your druggist will return your money.
